THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

SIR LAWRENCE HUGH JENKINS, K C I E

THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT BOMBAY

PREFACE TO THE NINTH EDITION.

The present edition contains cases in the authorised and unauthorised series reported up to the end of 1929.

Since the publication of the last edition there have been a number of important rulings both by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and the High Courts of India. This rendered it necessary to rewrite many portions of the Commentary.

Order 34 which relates to suits on mortgages has been amended by the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act 1929 and the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1930. The commentary under that Order has been entirely rewritten and the distinction between the old and the new law has been pointed out. The Letters Patent of the various High Courts have also been amended by the Letters Patent of 1928 and the Letters Patent of 1929. These amendments also have been dealt with in their proper place.

The writer desires to acknowledge gratefully the valuable assistance rendered by Mr Justice Pratt in preparing the present edition.

The High Courts Act 1861, the Government of India Act 1915 and the Letters Patent of the seven High Courts, with an exhaustive commentary on each clause, are relegated to an Appendix. The Rules made from time to time by the Chartered High Courts will be found in the remaining Appendices. The writer has to thank the Registrars of the High Courts of Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Allahabad, Patna, Lahore and Rangoon for the assistance kindly rendered in furnishing him with copies of the Rules of those High Courts and with complete information in connection with them.

Pursuant to the desire of a large number of legal practitioners references have been given throughout to Indian Cases and the All India Reporter. The mode of citation of the All India Reporter is as follows —

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION.

In preparing the present edition I had the unique assistance of the notes of Sir Lawrence Jenkins—the eminent and illustrious lawyer who filled the office of Chief Justice of the High Court of Bombay with great ability and distinction for well nigh ten years The notes above referred to were prepared by Sir Lawrence Jenkins while he was on the Special Committee which met at Simla in June 1907 and modelled the Code of Civil Procedure in its present form That the Code of 1908 is a considerable improvement upon its predecessor is beyond all question The arrangement though novel is scientific It proceeds upon the lines of the Judicature Acts and the Rules framed under those Acts It consists of two parts—the first containing provisions of a substantive character and the second containing provisions which relate to matters of mere machinery The 158 sections which form the body of the Code constitute the first part The Rules and Orders comprised in Schedule I constitute the second part The provisions of the Code of 1882 relating to arbitration have been transferred to a separate schedule being Schedule II the object being to facilitate the repeal of these provisions on the passing of a new and comprehensive Arbitration Act Sections 321 to 325 C of the same Code which relate to execution of decrees by Collectors have been transferred to Schedule III Schedule IV contains a list of enactments amended and Schedule V a list of enactments repealed by the new Code

The arrangement of the present work is a simple one Long familiarity with the section numbers of the Code of 1882 has rendered it necessary to give a comparative table of the sections of the old and the new Code Such a table has accordingly been given and to facilitate reference to it which is likely to be constant the table portion has been marked off by a piece of tape attached to the volume At the same time we have given at the beginning of each section and rule of the new Code references to the corresponding sections of the Code of 1882 in thick black types enclosed in square brackets There are besides a large number of rules comprised in the First Schedule which have been borrowed from the Rules made under the Judicature Acts References to the latter rules also have been given in square brackets at the beginning of the corresponding rules of this Code and are indicated by the letters R S C, being an abbreviation of the words Rules of the Supreme Court of England see for instance, Order 1 rule 1, at p 304

RECEIVED THE ASSENT OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL ON THE 21ST MARCH 1908

An Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the Procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature, It is hereby enacted as follows —

Preliminary

Short title commencement and extent

1 [S 1] (1) This Act may be cited as the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908

(2) It shall come into force on the first day of January, 1909

(3) This section and sections 155 to 158 extend to the whole of British India the rest of the Code extends to the whole of British India, except the Scheduled Districts

Previous Procedure —The first Code of Civil Procedure was Act 8 of 1859 Before that the procedure of the Mofussil Courts was regulated by special Acts and Regulations which were repealed by Act 10 of 1861 and the procedure of the Supreme Courts was under their own rules and orders and certain Acts e g Act 17 of 1852 and Act 6 of 1854 The Code of 1859 applied to Mofussil Courts only In 1862 the Supreme Courts and the Courts of Sadder Diwany Adalat in the Presidency Towns were abolished by the High Courts Act 1861 (24 and 25 Vic c 104) and the powers of those Courts were vested in the Chartered High Courts The Letters Patent of 1862 establishing the High Courts extended to them the procedure of the Code of 1859 The Charters of 1865 which empowered the High Courts to make rules and orders regulating proceedings in civil cases required them to be guided as far as possible by the provisions of the Code of 1859 and subsequent amending Acts. Such amending Acts are Act 4 of 1860 43 of 1860 23 of 1861 9 of 1863 26 of 1867, 7 of 1870 14 of 1870 9 of 1871 32 of 1871 and 7 of 1872

The next Code was Act 10 of 1877 which repealed that of 1859 This was amended by Acts 18 of 1878 and 12 of 1879 and then superseded by the Code of 1882 (Act 14 of 1882) This was amended by Acts 15 of 1882 14 of 1885 4 of 1886 10 of 1886 7 of 1887 8 of 1887 6 of 1888 10 of 1888 13 of 1889 8 of 1890 6 of 1892 5 of 1894 7 of 1895 and 13 of 1895 and then superseded by the present Code

The chief feature of this Code is its division into two parts on the lines of the Judicature Acts and the Rules framed under those Acts The main body of the Code is in the sections and the rules refer to matters of mere machinery which the High Courts may adapt to local condition

Consolidate and amend—The preamble shews that the object of the present Act is not only to amend but also to consolidate the law of civil procedure If the meaning is plain no regard should be paid to the previous law and the language of the Act must be interpreted uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law But if the meaning be doubtful resort may be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the Act (a)

1 The golden rule for the interpretation of this as well as all other Acts is to consider the plain meaning of the words used (b) The Court's function is not to say what the Legislature meant but to ascertain what the Legislature has said it meant (c) and it is always dangerous to paraphrase an Act (d)

2 Procedure is mere machinery and its object is to facilitate and not to obstruct the administration of justice (e) The Code should therefore be construed liberally and so far as possible technical objections should not be allowed to defeat substantial justice (f) No defence should be excluded except where to do so would be to negative the provision of a rule of procedure It is no longer a province of procedure to exclude defences (g)

3 The Code is one continuous whole the sections being enacted simultaneously (h) and so when two procedures or two remedies are provided one of them is not to be construed as in derogation of the other (i)

4 In matters of procedure uniformity of decision is important (j) and if a Judge finds a principle laid down by competent authority it is better to accept and apply it even if his own mind is not satisfied than to fritter it away in its application to cases which manifestly come within it (k)

5 Previous legislation may be referred to as an aid to construction but only in case of ambiguity (l)

6 Proceedings of the Legislature in passing an Act are to be excluded from consideration in the judicial construction of the Act The e proceedings include Reports of Select Committees Statements of Objects and Reasons attached to Bill and debates of the Legislature Before the rule had been settled by the Privy Council in

7 Marginal notes to the sections of an Act are not to be referred to for the purpose of construing an Act (p)

8 Illustrations in Acts of the Legislature although not part of the sections are helpful in the working and application of the Acts and it is the duty of a Court of law to accept them if that can be done as being both of relevance and value in the construction of the text The illustration should in no case be rejected because they do not square with ideas possibly derived from another system of jurisprudence as to the law with which the sections deal And it would require a very special case to warrant their rejection on the ground of their assumed repugnancy to the sections themselves It would be the very last resort of construction to make any such assumption (q) But an illustration cannot be allowed to control the plain meaning of a section (r)

9 The essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law and it is not the province of a judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction (s) In cases however where there is no specific provision in the Code the Court has the power and it would seem it is its duty to act according to justice equity and good conscience (t) See s 151

10 Every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing law must be presumed to be intended not to have a retrospective operation But this presumption does not apply to enactments affecting procedure or practice such as the Code of Civil Procedure The reason is that no person has a vested right in any course of procedure The general principle indeed seems to be that alterations in the procedure are always retrospective unless there be some good reason against it (u) But an appellate Court cannot reverse an order made under an old Code on the ground that the new Code has enacted a different rule (v) The right of appeal however is in the nature of a vested right and hence the provision in s 154 of the Code declaring that nothing in this Code shall affect any present right of appeal which shall have accrued to any party at its commencement

11 The Code consists (i) of that which is termed the body of the Code and (ii) of the rules The body of the Code is fundamental and is unalterable except by the Legislature the rules are concerned with details and machinery and can be more readily altered Thus it will be found that the body of the Code creates jurisdiction

while the rules indicate the mode in which it is to be exercised It follows that the body of the Code is expressed in more general terms and it has to be read in conjunction with the more particular provisions of the rules (w)

Courts of Civil Judicature—These are Civil Courts in British India In olvency procedure is civil procedure but the procedure of Insolvency Courts both in the Mofussil and in Presidency Towns is regulated by special Acts though in certain matters the procedure of the Code is applied so far as it may be applicable (x) The Code applies to proceedings on the Admiralty side of the High Court (y) It also applies to proceedings in the testamentary and intestate jurisdiction of the High Courts and Mofussil Courts except as otherwise provided by the Indian Succession Act 19.. ( ) and to matrimonial suits subject to the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act As to Small Cause Courts there is special provision in sections 7 and 8 Revenue Courts are Civil Courts and it has been held that they are governed by the Code except in matters where a special procedure is enacted by the local Act (a) Special provision is made in sec 5 for such Courts in order to preserve the summary character of rent litigation under local laws But the Code does not apply to Mamlatdars Courts (b)

British India—The expression British India is not defined in the Code In the absence of any definition of a particular expression in an Act we are to turn to the definition of it in the General Clauses Act X of 1897 There are several terms of frequent or general occurrence in several Acts and these are defined in the General Clauses Act British India is one of them and it is defined in that Act (s 3 cl 1) as meaning all territories and places within His Majesty's dominions which are for the time being governed by His Majesty through the Governor General of India or through any Governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor General of India The words British India therefore exclude the territories of Native States (c) such as the Kathiawar States (d) Territories ceded by Native States not in full sovereignty but for limited purposes such as the establishment of a civil station (e) or for railway administration (f) are not part of British India Aden (g) and British Burma (h) are within British India but not Singapur (i) Acts 14 and 15 of 1874 declare not only Aden but also the Laccadive Andaman and Nicobar Islands and Ajmere and Merwara in Rajputana to be parts of British India. The phrase the whole of British India include the Scheduled Districts (j)

Scheduled Districts—A list of Scheduled Districts is given in Schedule I to the Schedule Districts Act XIV of 1874 The sections of this Code except s 1 and ss 155 to 158 do not extend to any of the Scheduled Districts Section 5 however of the Scheduled Districts Act empowers the Local Government with the sanction of the Governor General in Council to extend to any of the Scheduled Districts any enactments in force in British India and the whole of the Procedure Code has accordingly been extended to several Scheduled Districts including Sind Ajmere Merwara and the Scheduled Districts of the Punjab (k) and also to the Berars (l) and to Jalpaiguri (m)

2 [S 2] In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

Definition

(1) "Code" includes rules

See notes on p 3 para No (11)

(2) "decree" means the formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final It shall be deemed to include the rejection of a plaint and the determination of any question within section 47 or section 144, but shall not include—

(a) any adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order, or

(b) any order of dismissal for default

Explanation —A decree is preliminary when further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of It is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit It may be partly preliminary and partly final

(3) "decree-holder" means any person in whose favour a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made

Definition of "decree" in the Code of Civil Procedure 1882—The term "decree" was defined in the Code of 1882 as follows —

"Decree" means the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed or defence set up in a Civil Court when such adjudication so far as regards the Court expressing it decides the suit or appeal An order rejecting a plaint or directing accounts to be taken or determining any question mentioned or referred to in section 244 [now s 47] but not specified in section 588 [now s 104 and O 43 r 1] is within this definition an order specified in section 588 is not within this definition

Importance of the definition of decree—The adjudications of a Court of law may be divided into two classes namely (1) decrees and (2) orders Orders again may be sub divided into appealable orders and non appealable orders The expression "order" is defined in cl (14) of the present section as meaning "the formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree"

Where a decision amounts to a decree it is invariably appealable unless it is expressly provided that no appeal shall lie from it (s 96) Further where an appeal is preferred from a decision which amounts to a decree and a decree is passed in appeal an appeal will lie to the High Court from the decree passed in appeal if the case comes within the provisions of s 100 below This is called a second appeal In the case therefore of an adjudication which amounts to a decree the law permits an appeal and in some cases also a second appeal

Where an adjudication amounts to an order no appeal lies from it unless it is enumerated in the list of appealable orders given in s 104 or in the list given in O 43 r 1

We have thus seen that an appeal lies from a decree We have also seen that an appeal lies from an order specified in s 104 or in O 43 r 1 What then is the distinction between a decree and an appealable order The distinction is this—that while in the case of an adjudication which amounts to a decree the law permits a second appeal in some cases no second appeal is allowed at all in the case of an adjudication which amounts to an appealable order That is to say if an appeal is preferred from a decree and a decree is passed in appeal an appeal will in certain cases lie from the decree passed in appeal But if an appeal is preferred from an appealable order and an order is passed in appeal no appeal lies at all from the order passed in appeal [s. 104 sub section (2)] To take an instance A appeals from a decision of a Subordinate Judge to a District Judge The appellate Court decides against A A prefers a second appeal to the High Court from the decision of the District Court If the decision of the Subordinate Judge amounts to a decree a second appeal will lie provided the case comes within s 100 But if the decision amounts to an appealable order no second appeal will lie

The definition of decree is important not only for determining the right of second appeal but for determining whether an appeal lies at all in the first instance If an adjudication is an appealable order there is no difficulty whatever in determining whether an appeal lies from it All that has to be done in such a case is to refer to s 104 and to O 43 r 1 and to ascertain whether the order is enumerated in the list there given. The real difficulty in determining the right of appeal arises when the adjudication from which an appeal is preferred is not an appealable order In such a case the adjudication may be either a decree or a non appealable order and an appeal can lie only if the adjudication amounts to a decree The appellant would in this class of cases endeavour to show that the adjudication appealed from is a decree while the respondent would endeavour to show that the adjudication is merely an order Instances of this class of cases are given in the next following paragraph

Essential elements of a decree—The term decree is defined in the Code as meaning the formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit The words italicized above indicate the distinguishing marks of a decree To constitute a decision a decree the following conditions must be present —

I —The decision must have been expressed in a suit

II —The decision must have been expressed on the right of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit

III —The decision must be one which conclusively determines those right

IV —The decision must have been given formal expression as an adjudication

If all these conditions are fulfilled the decision is a decree if not it is an order or a finding on an issue

I In a suit.—Every suit is commenced by a plaint (n) and when there is no civil suit there is no decree (o) Some proceedings commenced by an application are statutory suits so that the decision is a decree e g a contentious probate proceeding (p) or an

II Rights of parties as to matters in controversy—There must have been an adjudication on the rights of the parties (w) An order of dismissal for default of appearance is no determination of the rights of the parties and therefore is not a decree (x) So also an order under O 9 r 2 dismissing a suit when summons is not served in consequence of plaintiff s failure to pay Court fee (y) Special provision is made in the definition of decree for orders of dismissal for default apparently because the previou cases were not consistent An order rejecting an appeal under O 41 r 10 for failure to furnish security is not a decree as it does not determine the rights of the parties in controversy in the appeal ( ) An order granting leave to withdraw a suit with leave to file a fresh suit is not a decree for the rights of the parties are left open for determination in the subsequent suit (a) The right in controversy must be a substantive right and not merely a processual right for a finding on a processual right is only to enable the Court to inquire into the rights in controversy in the suit (b) Thus an order that a plaint should be stamped with a higher Court fee is not a decree (c)

III Conclusively determines—This expression implies that the decision must be one which is complete and final as regards the Court which passed it The decree may conclusively determine the rights of the parties although it does not completely dispose of the suit See note on p 8 Preliminary Decree

IV Formal expression—All requirements of form must be complied with Thus if no decree has been drawn up no appeal will lie from the judgment (d) Again a finding in an issue cannot be the subject of an appeal until it has been embodied in the judgment and decree This point was overlooked in some Bombay cases (e) which have been overruled (f)

Points of distinction between the definition of decree in this Code and that in the Code of 1882 —The definition of decree as it stood in the Code of 1882 has been modified in the following two respects —

1 Under the Code of 1882 no adjudication came within the definition of a decree unless it decided the suit Under this Code an adjudication which conclusively (g) determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit is a decree though it does not completely dispose of the suit But the decree in that case is called a preliminary decree as distinguished from a final decree The present definition is wider than that in the Code of 1882 in that it includes preliminary decrees within its scope the object being to permit an appeal from preliminary decrees See notes below Preliminary decree

2 Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether an order of dismissal for default was a decree The present section expressly declares that an order of dismissal for default is not within the definition of decree the object being to exclude the right of appeal from such order See note below Order of dismissal for default

Two other alterations both of a minor character may also be noted here They are as follows —

(i) An adjudication directing accounts to be taken is no longer to be deemed to be a decree as under the Code of 1882 it is a decree by the very terms of the present definition though a preliminary one Under the Code of 1882 such an adjudication was appealable for it was to be deemed to be a decree Under this Code it is appealable for it is a decree This distinction however is of no practical importance See notes to s 97 below

(ii) The word within has been substituted for mentioned or referred to in with a view to bring within the definition of decree orders against sureties (s 145) and orders as to Court fees in pauper suits (O 33 r 13) and thus providing for appeals therefrom See notes to s 14 and O 33 r 13

The definition of decree is important because it determines the right of appeal Hence every material change made in the definition of that term must be taken to have been made for the purpose either of permitting an appeal from adjudications which were not appealable before or excluding a right of appeal from adjudications from which an appeal was permitted under the old law It is from this standpoint therefore that the new definition has been examined

Preliminary decree —A decree may be preliminary or final or it may be partly preliminary and partly final A decree is preliminary when the adjudication though it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to some or one of the matters in controversy in the suit does not completely dispose of the suit and further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of It is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit (h) As to appeals from decrees see ss 96 and 97

The question whether a decision amounts to a preliminary decree is one of considerable importance in view of the provisions of s 97 by which it is provided that if a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree does not appeal therefrom within the period of limitation allowed for appeals he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in an appeal from the final decree The High Court of Bombay as already noted at one time treated findings on issues as preliminary decrees but this was set right by the Full Bench in Chanmalswami v Gangadharappa (i) The following are instances of decrees that are final or preliminary or partly final and partly preliminary

(g) The addition of the word conclusively is in accordance with the decision in Lekha v Bhauna (1896) 18 All 101 104

1 Suits for recovery of possession of immovable property and for rent or mesne profits (O 20 r 12)
2 Administration suits (O 20 r 13)
3 Suits for pre emption (O 20 r 14)

8 Suits for sale of mortgaged property (O 34 rr 4 5)
9 Suits for redemption of a mortgage (O 34 rr 7 8)

The above list is not exhaustive and there is nothing to preclude the Courts from passing a preliminary decree in other cases (j)

Rejection of plaint —As to an adjudication rejecting a plaint it has been expressly provided by the present clause that it shall be deemed to be a decree Such adjudication therefore is appealable as a decree (k) An appeal however is not the only remedy open to a party whose plaint is rejected for he may cure the defect for which the plaint was rejected and present a fresh plaint (O 7 r 13) As to the cases in which a plaint shall be rejected see O 7 r 11

Rejection of memorandum of appeal—The rejection of a plaint is deemed to be a decree There is no express provision for the rejection of a memorandum of appeal but the Court has the power to do so under sec 107 (2) An order rejecting an appeal as not duly presented (m) or as scandalous (n) or as insufficiently stamped (o) is appealable as a decree A memorandum of appeal which is time barred is dismissed under the Limitation Act and such dismissal disposes of the appeal and is appealable as a decree (p) When an appeal is rejected under O 41 r 10 (2) for failure to furnish security for costs there is no appeal for the order does not determine the rights of the parties (q)

Order returning memorandum of appeal—No appeal lies from an order returning a memorandum of appeal to be presented to the proper Court (r) Nor does an appeal lie from an order returning a memorandum of appeal for amendment

Section 47—Execution proceedings—An execution proceeding though a proceeding in a suit is not a suit (s) An order made in an execution proceeding is not a decree unless it determines a question within sec 47 (t) If it decides a question relating to the rights and liabilities of the parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree it falls within the scope of sec 47 and is a decree—but orders that are merely incidental and refer to the conduct of the proceedings are not within the section (u) Thus a decision refusing to recognize the transferee of a decree (v) or to record an adjustment of a decree (w) falls within sec 47 and is appealable as a decree But an order refusing leave to bid at an execution sale (x) or staying or refusing to stay execution on security being furnished (y) is an interlocutory matter and not appealable

Section 144—Restitution—The determination of a question under sec 144 is a decree and is appealable as such. See note Bar of Suit under sec 144 (2)

Appealable orders—Appealable orders are those specified in sec 104 and O 43 r 1 They are excluded from the definition of decree even though they may fall under sec 47 and would be decrees if the Code had not expressly excluded them e g an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale under O 21 r 92 The effect of this exclusion is to do away with the right of second appeal

Order of dismissal for default —A suit may be dismissed for default of appearance under O 9 r 8 Such a dismissal is not a decree and is not appealable Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions the Madras High Court holding that the order was not appealable ( ) while the other High Courts held that it was appealable (a) An appeal may be dismissed for default of appearance under O 41 r 11 (2) or r 17 Such an order of dismissal is not a decree and is not appealable (b) But an order dismi ing an appeal under O 41 r 11 (1) had been held to be a decree (c)

There may al o be a dismi al for default under O 9 r 3 if neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing This is al o excluded from the definition of decree

Non appealable orders —Orders that are not appealable are generally speal ing orders that are processual i e interlocutory or incidental orders regulating procedure but not deciding any of the matters in controversy in the suit Such orders occur both in suits and in execution proceedings Their number is legion and the following are cited merely by way of illustration In suits — under ec 148 for enlargement of time (d) under ec 1. for amendment of a clerical error in a judgment (e) under O 9 r . granting an application for restoration of a suit ( ) under O 9 r 13 granting an application to et aside an ex parte decree (g) under O 14 r 9 refusing to frame an issue (h) In execution proceedings —under O 21 r 40 refusing an application to arrest a judgment debtor (i) under O .1 r 66 settling the terms of a sale proclamation (j) See al o cases cited under note Section 47—Execution proceedings p 10

Decree holder —The definition in the Code of 1882 included a transferee of a decree but thi was inconsistent with the provi ions relating to execution whereby an oral transferee has no locus stan li the section therefore enacts that a transferee is not a decree holder unless he has been recognised by the Court A decree for specific performance of an agreement for the sale of immovable property may be executed either by the plaintiff or the defendant either party being a decree holder in such a case (k)

(4) district " means the local limits of the jurisdiction of a principal Civil Court of Original jurisdiction (hereinafter called a District Court "), and includes the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of a High Court

(5) "foreign Court" means a Court situate beyond the limits of British India which has no authority in British India and is not established or continued by the Governor General in Council

Foreign Court—The Privy Council is not within this definition for though it is situate beyond the limits of British India it is invested with judicial authority within it (m) But the High Court of Justice in England whether it be the Chancery Division (n) or the King's Bench Division (o) is a foreign Court The Ceylon Court also is a foreign Court (p) and so is the Supreme Court of Mauritius (q) and Courts in Native States (r) As to suits on judgments of the High Court of Justice in England see notes to s 13 A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment etc

(6) "foreign judgment" means the judgment of a foreign Court

(7) "Government Pleader" includes any officer appointed by the local Government to perform all or any of the functions expressly imposed by this Code on the Government Pleader and also any pleader acting under the directions of the Government Pleader

(8) "Judge" means the presiding officer of a Civil Court

No judge can act in any matter in which he has any pecuniary interest nor where he has any interest though not a pecuniary one sufficient to create a real bias (s)

(9) "judgment" means the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order

Judgment—In England the word judgment is generally used in the same sense as decree in this Code For the meaning of the word in the Letters Patent see Appendix II

(10) "judgment debtor" means any person against whom a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made

(11) "legal representative" means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased and where a party sues or is sued in a representative character the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued

Legal representative—The expression legal representative was not defined in the Code of 188 In its strictest sense the term legal representative was limited to executors and administrators only (t) and in cases under the Indian Succession Act that is still the case (u) But its meaning was extended after many conflicting decisions to include heirs and also persons who without title either as executors administrators or heirs, were in possession of the estate of the deceased All these earlier cases are reviewed in Dinamoni v Elahadut Khan (v) and the definition settles the meaning of the term as there explained (u) See also notes to sec 50 sec 52 and O 22 r 3 Party in a representative character Where a person is a party in a representative character the legal representative is the person who after his death represents the estate that is the subject matter of the suit Thus on the death of a trustee or of a shebait of a mutt his successor in office and not his executor or heir is the legal representative and the suit would be continued by or against the successor under O 22 r 3 or r 4 A reversioner sues in a representative character as representing the reversionary right to the estate of the last male owner The legal representative of such reversioner is the next reversioner and a suit by a reversioner to set aside an adoption by a widow may be continued on his death by the next reversioner (x) A suit by a Hindu daughter (y) or by a Hindu widow ( ) to recover the father s or husband s estate is continued after her death by the next heirs entitled to come in after her except in Bombay where the daughter takes an absolute estate It has been held that a coparcener leaves no estate in the coparcenary property at his death and so the surviving coparcener is not his legal representative with reference to that property (a) See note Legal Representative under O 22 r 3 The Official Assignee has been held to be the legal representative of the insolvent judgment debtor within the meaning of O 21 r 22 of the Code (b)

Intermeddles with the estate —One who intermeddles with the estate of a deceased person even though it may be with part thereof is a legal representative within the meaning of this clause and is liable to the extent of the property taken possession of by him (c) But it has been held that a mere trespasser is not a legal representative as he has not intermeddled with the intention of representing the estate (d)

(12) ‘mesne profits” of property means those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits, but shall not include profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession

Mesne profits —The Code of 1882 for the first time included interest in the definition of mesne profits The reservation as to profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession is new

(13) "movable property" includes growing crops

Growing crops —These are now movable property and cases in which crops were held to be immovable property until reaped are obsolete The definition must be limited to the Code for under sec 3 (26) of the General Clauses Act 1897 standing crops are immovable property

(14) "order" means the formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree

See notes under cl (3) of this section

(15) "pleader" means any person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court and includes an advocate, a vakil and an attorney of a High Court

Pleader —The term pleader is here used in a much larger sense than its ordinary signification as a convenient term to designate all persons who are entitled to plead for others in Court Pleader in its ordinary sense is synonymous with vakil (e)

Authority to compromise —An attorney or solicitor is entitled in the exercise of his discretion to enter into a compromise on behalf of his client if he does so in a bona fide manner (f) And so is counsel (g) But a pleader cannot enter into a compromise on behalf of his client without his client s express authority (h) The reason is that both counsel and solicitor have an implied authority to compromise the former by reason of his retainer and the latter by virtue of his position of agent in relation to his client (i)

The result is that the consent of the client is not needed for a matter which is within the ordinary authority of counsel and if a compromise is entered into by counsel it binds the client though his consent was not taken (j) But what if the authority of counsel has been expressly limited by the client and counsel consents to an order or decree in spite of the dissent of the client or on terms differing from those which the client authorized ? In such a case if the limitation of authority is communicated to the other side consent by counsel outside the limits of his authority is of no effect (k) If the limitation is not communicated to the other side the question arises whether having regard to the fact that the other side entered into the compromise believing that the opponent s counsel had the ordinary unlimited authority the Court has power to interfere It has been recently held by the House of Lords that it has and that it is not prevented by the agreement of counsel from setting aside or refusing to enforce the compromise that it is a matter for the discretion of the Court and that when in the particular circumstances of the case grave injustice would be done by allowing the compromise to stand the compromise may be set aside even although the limitation of counsel s authority was unknown to the other side (l) The authority of counsel and solicitor to compromise a suit is limited to the issues in the suit A compromise will not therefore be binding on a client if it extends to matters outside the scope of the particular case in which the counsel or solicitor is retained (m) The appointment of a receiver of debutter property in a partition suit is a collateral matter and not within the scope of counsel s authority and an arrangement for the appointment of a party s attorney as r ceiver interrupts the relationship of attorney and client and will be set aside (n) A compromise effect ed out of Court is also not binding upon the client (o) but a compromise entered into by coun el and sanctioned by the Court is not vitiated merely because counsel consi dered the matter in the corridor of the Court or the Bar library (p) And since a comprom e i no more than an agreement it can be set aside at the instance of the client if it has been made by the counsel or solicitor under a misrepresentation or mistake (q) The application to have the suit restored to the list should be made before the decree is sealed (r)

Power to refer to arbitration —The law is the same as regards reference to arbitration Coun el has an implied power to consent to a reference and so has a soli citor on the record (s) But the authority does not extend to referring the case to arbitration on terms different from those which the client has authorised (t) A pleader or vakil has no power to refer a case without the expre s authority of his client (u) nor to settle a case by the oath of the opposite party (v)

Authority to withdraw suit —Counsel has an implied power to withdraw an action (w) As regards vakils or pleaders it has been held that a vakalutnama couched in general terms suffices prima facie to authorize him to apply on behalf of his client for leave to withdraw a suit and in the absence of anything to show that the vakil had acted contrary to the client s instructions or otherwi e was guilty of mis conduct in making the application the client is bound by the act of his vakil (x)

Power to bind client by admission —Counsel (y) solicitors ( ) and pleaders or vakils (a) have an implied authority to bind their clients by admissions of fact pro vided such admissions are made during the actual progress of litigation and not in mere conversation (b) A verbal admission by a pleader must be taken as a whole and must not be unduly pressed (c) but an admission of liability by a vakil is sufficient to warrant a decree against his client in the suit (d) The result is that the client will be bound by the admi sion even though it may be erroneous But counsel solicitor or vakil cannot bind his client by an admission on a point of law Hence if the admission be erroneous the client is free to repudiate it (e) It may here be observed that the omission

(16) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules

(17) "public officer" means a person falling under any of the following descriptions, namely —

(a) every Judge,

(b) every member of the Indian Civil Service,

(c) every commissioned or gazetted officer in the military or naval forces of His Majesty, including His Majesty's Indian Marine Service, while serving under the Government,

(d) every officer of a Court of Justice whose duty it is, as such officer, to investigate or report on any matter of law or fact, or to make, authenticate or keep any document, or to take charge or dispose of any property, or to execute any judicial process, or to administer any oath, or to interpret, or to preserve order, in the Court, and every person especially authorised by a Court of Justice to perform any of such duties,

(h) every officer in the service or pay of the Government, or remunerated by fees or commission for the performance of any public duty

Public Officer —The definition very nearly corresponds to that of a public servant in the Indian Penal Code but a person may be a public servant and not a public officer e g a Municipal Commissioner and Engineer (h) The following have been held to be public officers a Collector and Agent for the Court of Wards (i) the Official Trustee of Bengal (j) an officer of the Indian Staff Corps (k) an officer in the Indian Army (l) an Official Assignee (m) the Administrator General of Bengal (n) a Cantonment Committee (o) a Receiver in insolvency (p)

(18) "rules" means rules and forms contained in the First Schedule or made under section 122 or section 125

As to the relation of the body of the Code to Rules see notes to s 1 p 3 para No (11)

(19) "share in a corporation" shall be deemed to include stock, debenture stock, debentures, or bonds and

(20) "signed," save in the case of a judgment or decree, includes stamped

Signed —The definition is wider than in the General Clauses Act Indians of rank sometimes use a stamp instead of signing and inability to write is not a condition precedent to the use of a stamp (q)

3 [S 2] For the purposes of this Code, the District Court is subordinate to the High Court, and every Civil Court of a grade inferior to that of a District Court and every Court of Small Causes is subordinate to the High Court and District Court

Subordination of Courts—The High Court with reference to civil proceedings is the highest Court of Appeal in the part of British India in which the Act or Regulation containing the expression operates see sec 3 (24) General Clauses Act 1897 The enumeration of subordinate Courts is not exhaustive and a Collector exercising judicial functions under the Mamlatdars Courts Act is subject to the superintendence and control of the High Court (r)

Different rulings of different High Courts—Where there are different rulings of different High Courts on a particular point a Subordinate Judge should follow the decision in law of a Bench of the High Court to which he is subordinate unless the decision of the Bench has been overruled by a decision of a Full Bench of that Court or unless it has been overruled expressly or impliedly on an appeal to His Majesty in Council or unless the law has been altered by a subsequent Act of the Legislature (s)

4 [S 4] (1) Savings In the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any special or local law now in force or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed, by or under any other law for the time being in force

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the proposition contained in sub section (1), nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any remedy which a landholder or landlord may have under any law for the time being in force for the recovery of rent of agricultural land from the produce of such land

Special or local law—The section does not mean that the Code does not apply to proceedings under special or local laws but only enacts that where there is an inconsistency the rules of the Code do not prevail (t) For instances of such inconsistencies the undermentioned cases (u) may be referred to The Mamlatdars Courts Act enacts its own special procedure which excludes that of the Code (v)

The section gives a local Act local validity and special procedure validity its own sphere No local Legislature can prescribe procedure for any Court beyond its own jurisdiction (w)

Any special form of procedure—It has been held having regard to these words that where two Judges differ in an appeal from the Original Side of the High Court the special procedure laid down in cl 36 of the Letters Patent should be followed and not the rule laid down in s 98 of the Code (x) S 98 (3) which was added by Act 18 of 1928 gives effect to these divisions

5 [S 4 A] (1) Where any Revenue Courts are governed by the provisions of this Code in those matters of procedure upon which any special enactment applicable to them is silent, the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any portions of those provisions which are not expressly made applicable by this Code shall not apply to those Courts, or shall only apply to them with such modifications as the Local Government may prescribe Application of the Code to Revenue Courts.

(2) Revenue Court ' in sub section (1) means a Court having jurisdiction under any local law to entertain suits or other proceedings relating to the rent, revenue or profits of land used for agricultural purposes, but does not include a Civil Court having original jurisdiction under this Code to try such suits or proceedings as being suits or proceedings of a civil nature

Object of the section —The object of this section is to preserve the summary character of rent litigation under local laws

Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees —The jurisdiction of a Munsif in Bengal N W P and Assam extends to suits (not otherwise exempted from his cognizance) of which the value does not exceed Rs 1 000 and in the Madras Presidency to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 2 500 It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (y) Allahabad (z) Madras (a) and Patna (b) that where a suit is properly brought in the Court of a Munsif for recovery of possession of land and mesne profits prior to the date of the suit and there is a prayer also for mesne profits from the institution of the suit which are claimed or assessed at a sum beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif the Munsif has jurisdiction to fix the mesne profits from and after the date of the institution of the suit and pass a decree therefor though the amount may be beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction The value of such a suit for the purposes of jurisdiction is the value of the immovable property plus mesne profits up to the date

(i) suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes,

(ii) the execution of decrees in such suits,

(iii) the execution of decrees against immoveable property, and

(b) the following sections, that is to say,—

sections 91 and 92,

sections 94 and 95 so far as they authorize or relate to—

(i) orders for the attachment of immoveable property,

Changes in the section —The words in italics were substituted by Act I of 1926 for the words so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders which occurred in cl (b) of the original rule after the words and figures sections 94 and 95

Attachment before judgment by Provincial Small Cause Court —A Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to attach movable property before judgment An attachment before judgment is not one of the interlocutory orders referred to in cl (b) of the section (c)

As regards immovable property there were conflicting decisions of the Calcutta High Court on the question whether a Provincial Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to order an attachment of such property before judgment The whole question was considered by a Full Bench of that High Court in the undermentioned case (d) and it was held by a majority that a Court of Small Cause has such jurisdiction but expressed a doubt as to the intention of the Legislature in the matter when the Code was passed in 1908 To resolve that doubt the word in italics were substituted by Act I of 1926 for the words so far as they relate to injunction and interlocutory order which occurred in cl (b) of the original section after the words sections 94 and 95 To make the matter clearer a new rule being rule 13 was added to O 38 by the same Act

PART I

Suits in General

Jurisdiction of the Courts and Res Judicata

9 [S 11] The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred

Courts to try all civil suits unless barred

Explanation —A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies

Alterations in the section —The word either expressly or impliedly barred have been substituted for the words barred by any enactment for the time being in force which occurred in s 11 of the Code of 1882 The latter words were held to mean expressly barred (e)

Onus —A party seeking to oust the jurisdiction of ordinary Civil Courts must establish his right to do so (f)

Suits of a civil nature —Suits may be divided into two classes—(1) those which are of a civil nature and (2) those which are not of a civil nature It is suits only of a civil nature which a civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain A civil Court has no jurisdiction to try suits which are not of a civil nature The explanation shews that if the principal or only question in the suit is a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies the suit is not of a civil nature for it deals not with the rights of the citizen but with matters that are purely social But when (1) a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies is not the principal question in the suit but is merely a subsidiary question and (2) the principal question is of a civil nature e g a question as to any right to property or to an office or to any other civil right and (3) the principal question which is of a civil nature cannot be determined without deciding the caste question or question relating to religious rites or ceremonies the Court has the power to decide the caste question or question relating to religious rites or ceremonies to enable it to decide the principal question (g) It is upon this principle that the Explanation to the section is based We may therefore say that a suit is of a civil nature if the principal question in the suit relates to a civil right The mere fact that the determination of such a question depends entirely on the decision of caste questions or questions as to religious rites or ceremonies does not take the suit out of the category of suits of a civil nature (see the Explanation to the section) We now proceed to consider the leading cases in which the Courts have refused to try suits on the ground either (1) that the principal question in the suit was a caste question or (2) that it related to religious rites or ceremonies

Suits in which the principal question is a caste question are not suits of a civil nature.—A caste is any well defined native community (be it Hindu or Mahomedan) governed for certain internal purposes by its own rules and regulations (h) A caste question is one which relates to matters affecting the internal autonomy of the caste and its social relations (i)

To determine whether or not a question is a caste question the test is—Would the cognizance of the matter in dispute by the Court be an interference with the autonomy of the caste? Would the Court be deciding the question which the caste as a self governing body is entitled to decide for itself If yes the question is a caste question and no civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain it (j) Thus a caste may pass a resolution depriving a member of man pan invitation or invitation to dinner or to munj or other ceremonic for an alleged breach of a caste rule The excluded member has no remedy in law for all that he has lost is a social privilege and not a legal right and the caste is the only tribunal to which a casteman deprived of that privilege can resort A civil Court has no power by its decree to compel the members of a caste to invite a casteman to dinner or to any ceremony (k) Similarly a Court has no power to compel barbers belonging to a certain caste to shave a casteman or to pare his nails though the party aggrieved may allege that he would lose caste by the loss of service at the hands of the barbers (l) On the same principle a member of a caste is not entitled to any remedy in law if the other members refuse to go to his house on the occasion of a death in his family and assist him in the removal of the dead body though they may in doing so break a rule of the caste It is not for a Court of law to enforce a caste rule or resolution it is for the caste itself that makes the rule or passes the resolution to do so (m) Hence a Court will not compel a defaulting membe to pay to the caste a sum of money which by a resolution of the caste every casteman is liable to pay on the occasion of a marriage in his family (n)

Expulsion from caste.—To exclude a member of a caste from invitation to caste dinners or ceremonies is as stated above to deprive him of a social privilege But to expel him from the caste is to deprive him of a legal right which forms part of his status Hence a suit will lie for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to be re admitted into the caste and also for damages for expulsion from the caste (o) But to entitle the plaintiff to a decree it must be shown that his excommunication was wrongful and the Court will in such cases enquire into the validity of the sentence of excommunication Excommunication is wrongful if a member is expelled from the caste without opportunity of explanation being offered to him (p) It is also wrongful if a member is expelled for an alleged breach of a caste rule which as a matter of fact he has not broken (q) In the mufassal of Bombay however a suit does not lie for restoration to caste the cognizance of such a suit being expressly barred by Bombay Regulation II of 1827 s 21 (r) But a suit is maintainable for damages on account of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party

Suits in which the principal question relates to religious rites or ceremonies are not suits of a civil nature—Thus a suit will not lie to establish a right to parade bullocks on certain days (t) or to compel punjaris to adorn an idol at certain seasons (u) or to instal it in a particular temple instead of in another (v) There is no right of a civil nature involved in these cases and the Court will not pronounce on any religious doctrine unless it is necessary to do so in order to determine rights of property (w)

Suits for vindication of a mere dignity attached to an office are not suits of a civil nature—A claim by a Swami (arch priest) that he is entitled to be carried on the high road of a town or village in a palanquin on ceremonial occasions will not be entertained by a civil Court (x) What is claimed by the plaintiff in such a case is a mere mark of honour appended to the office of a Swami Civil Courts should discourage as much as possible claims of so unsubstantial and objectionable a nature and they ought not to be involved in the determination of trivial questions of dignity and privilege although connected with an office For the same reason a suit will not lie for a declaration that the plaintiff as gurukkal or spiritual leader is entitled to be received at a pagoda by the wardens of the pagoda with the honours and emoluments due to his rank on the occasion of the annual festival of the pagoda The duty of individuals to submit to and perform certain religious observances in accordance with the ritual or conventional practices of their race or sect is in the absence of express legal recognition and provision an imperfect obligation of a moral and not a civil nature Of such obligations the present civil Court cannot take cognizance (y) Following this rule the Courts have declined to entertain claims made by holders of religious office to precedence in worship such as a claim to be the first to worship the deity and to receive gifts of rice and cocoanuts on certain public religious ceremonies ( ) They have likewise declined to decide disputes as to precedence or privilege between purely religious functionaries (a) It is important to note that the suit in each of the above cases was not to establish a right to an office but for a declaration that the plaintiff was by virtue of his office entitled to certain tokens of dignity or to votive offerings In other word the suit was not for a claim to an office but to vindicate an alleged dignity attached to an office A suit for an office is of a civil nature but a suit for vindication of a mere dignity though connected with an office is not But if honours be attached to an office by way of remuneration in other words as part of its emoluments a civil Court can entertain a suit for such honours (b)

Office—Suits in which the principal question is as to a civil or legal right are suits of a civil nature The right to an office is a right of a civil nature Therefore suits in which the principal question relates to the right to an office are suits of a civil nature and they are not the less so because the right claimed may depend on the decision of caste questions or questions as to religious rites or ceremonies or even religious tenets (c) See the Explanation to the section

Suits for secular office—When no remuneration attaches to the office of the secretary of an Association (registered under Act 21 of 1860) a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the secretary of the Association and that his dismissal from the office was not justified by the rules of the Association is not maintainable in a civil Court especially if the Association has the power to alter its rules from time to time The reason is that in such a case no decree which a civil Court may pass in plaintiff s favour could prevent the As ociation from altering its rules and then dispensing with the plaintiff s services and employing some one else (d)

Suits for religious office —Quaere whether every suit for a religious office is a suit of a civil nature? The Explanation to the section assumes that a suit in which the right to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature Now an office may be either secular or religious in its character We are here principally concerned with an office of a religious character for the que tion as to religious rites and ceremonies contemplated by the Explanation can only ari e when the right to a religious office is contested Religious offices may be divided into two classes namely —

I —Those to which fee are appurtenant as of right such as the office of the Ka i of Bombay or of the Joshi of a village or the Upadhayaya of a caste

II —Those to which no fees are attached but which entitle the holder thereof to receive such gratuities as may be paid to him such as the office of pujari or of an officiating priest in a temple or of the Aya of a math

Fees are to be distinguished from gratuities When fees are attached to an office the holder of the office is entitled on performance of the services to the stipulated or customary fees Thus a Ka i or Joshi is entitled on performing a marriage ceremony to the marriage fee and if the fee is not paid to him he may enforce payment by a suit In fact a fee is a sum which the holder of an office is entitled to demand as payment for the execution of functions attached to the office Be ides the fee paid to a Kazi or to a Joshi on the occasion of a marriage there may be gratuities paid to him which are entirely voluntary in their character If a person invites a Joshi for performing a marriage ceremony at his place and pays him the fee but no gratuity a suit will not lie at the in tance of the Jo hi for payment to him of any um by way of gratuity though it may be u ual to pay gratuities on such occasions the reason is that there is no obligation in law on the part of the person inviting a Joshi to make any payment by way of gratuity (e) The same remark applies to holders of religious offices referred to in class II above

The que tion which concerns us at present is whether a suit will lie at the instance of the holder of a religious office for disturbing him in the exercise of his office? If the office is wrongfully usurped can the person claiming to be the rightful holder of the office sue the intruder in a civil Court for a declaration that he is entitled to the office? Will a civil Court entertain such a suit? To answer these questions we must deal with the two classes of religious offices separately

As regards religious offices of the first class that is offices to which fees are attached there is no doubt that a suit will lie against an intruder for a declaration that the office is vested in the plaintiff Such a suit is a suit of a civil nature (f)

Turning now to religious offices of the second class the question that faces us i whether a suit will lie for an office to which no fees are attached? Different views have been held on this point by different Courts It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a suit by a person claiming to be entitled to a religious office against a usurper for a declaration of the plaintiff s right to the office is a suit of a civil nature and will therefore be entertained by a civil Court though no emoluments are attached to the office This conclusion is based upon the reasoning that a religious office though no fees are attached to it is an office within the meaning of the Explanation to this section and that the section assumes that a suit for an office is a suit of a civil nature The office in that case was that of musicians who chanted holy songs in a satra at a certain village (g) In another case the office was that of a shebait and the suit was by one member of a family against another for a declaration of a hereditary right to officiate as shebait at the worship performed by votaries at the foot of a certain tree It was held that the suit was maintainable In this case also there were no fees attached to the office but voluntary offerings were made by the votaries (h) In a third case the right claimed by the plaintiff was the right of worship of Saradiya Haragouri Thakurani and to make certain offerings to the image installed in the place of worship and it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain a suit against a usurper (i) It is worthy of note that in all these cases the office was one attached to a place as distinguished from an absolutely personal office

On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit does not lie for a religious office to which no fees are attached According to that Court a religious office to which no fees are attached is not an office within the meaning of this section (j) The office in one of these cases was that of the priest of Samayacharm whose duty was to exercise spiritual and moral supervision over a certain class of persons

As regards Bombay decisions if we are to reconcile them all we must divide them into two classes namely (1) those in which the religious office is attached to a temple shrine or sacred spot and (2) those in which the office is entirely personal in its character And it may be safely said that a suit will lie for a religious office which is attached to a place though no fees are appurtenant to it such as the office of an officiating priest in a temple or of the Aya of a math (k) But a suit will not lie for an office to which no fees are attached if the office be personal in its character such as the office of Chaluadi (l) [bearer on public occasions of the insignia of a caste] or the office of Guru (m) The distinction between offices that are attached to a place such as a temple or a math and offices that are in their nature personal is our own and it must be said that none of the Bombay decisions turns expressly on any such distinction This distinction has been devised to harmonize what would otherwise be a mass of conflicting decisions though it must be observed that even then there remains one Bombay decision in which the office was a personal one and there were no fees attached to the office and yet it was held that a suit would lie for the office The distinction suggested above was approved by the High Court of Bombay in a recent case where it was held that a right to perform Urus ceremonies and to collect offerings at the shrine of a saint appertains to a religious office and can be enforced by a suit (n) The principal question in that case was whether a suit lies for the office of Khatib (preacher) regard being had to the fact that no fees were attached to the office and it was held that it does The Court said Had it been the intention of the Legislature that such a suit should not lie the same would have been clearly provided for (o) But if it is a question of the intention of the Legislature it may be said that the Explanation to the section which did not occur in the Code of 1877 appears to have been suggested directly by a passage in a judgment in a Madras case decided in 1871 (p) which was approved in a subsequent case by the Privy Council (q) and the religious office in both those cases was one to which fees were attached

The High Court of Allahabad has held that a mere right to perform Ram Lila (religious pageants) which does not carry with it any right to emoluments nor is attached to a shrine or temple or secret spot cannot be enforced in a Court of law (r)

The Patna High Court has held that a right to officiate at funeral ceremonies performed upon the banks of the Ganges between certain points which did not carry any fees with it but merely gratuities cannot be enforced in a Civil Court (s)

Suits for recovery of fees attached to an office are suits of a civil nature but not suits for recovery of gratuities—It is settled law that if a person usurps an office to which another person is entitled and receives the fees of the office he is bound to account to the rightful owner for them and the rightful owner may sue the usurper to recover the fees properly payable to him But the case is different where the payments are merely voluntary and a suit will not lie to recover voluntary gratuities that may have been received by the usurper (t) The reason is that where voluntary offerings are made they must be taken to have been intended for the very person who was then actually performing the ceremony whether rightfully or wrongfully and further that it is quite possible that no gratuities would have been given at all if the rightful owner officiated at the ceremony instead of the usurper (u) The same principles apply when a suit is brought by the lawful holder of an office against a member of the caste for employing the usurper for performing ceremonies which the rightful holder was entitled to perform Thus a village priest may be entitled by hereditary right to officiate and take fees in the families of a particular caste in the village and if a member of the caste employs an intruder in the office to perform the ceremonies the village priest is entitled to recover from the casteman the fees which would properly be payable to him if he had been employed to perform those ceremonies (v) But a suit will not lie against a casteman for a gratuity which the party might have refused to give if he had pleased (w) If for determining the plaintiff's right to the fees claimed it becomes necessary to determine incidentally the right to perform the ceremonies the Courts should try and decide that right (x) The above principles have been held to apply to Watandar barbers who are entitled to render services as barbers on ceremonial occasions and to receive the customary fees (y)

The cases in which a suit by the rightful owner of a religious office against a usurper for recovery of voluntary gratuities has been held not to be maintainable must be distinguished from those where a suit is brought by a sharer in a religious office against his co sharers for recovery of his share of the voluntary gratuities In the latter class of cases it has been held that a suit will lie for the basis of the claim in such cases is an agreement expressed or implied that all the sharers should have a share in the gratuities (z)

Dues paid by taggals and shopkeepers to choudhris of bazars are in the nature of voluntary payments hence a suit will not lie to recover such dues or for a declaration

Where the question at issue is not a matter relating to the internal administration and affairs of a caste but to the property of the caste the civil Court has jurisdiction to interfere although there has been a division of opinion in the caste (c)

Suits relating to caste property—Suppose that a caste is divided into two factions F1 and F2 and that F1 owns certain property which stands in the names of some of its members If these members secede from faction F1 and go over to faction F2 a suit will lie to recover the property from them at the instance of faction F1 (d) Here the subject matter of the suit is property belonging to one section of the caste and the claim is against persons outside that section Suppose next that a caste owns a property purchased out of the caste funds and that it is subsequently divided into two factions F1 and F2 If faction F2 happens at the time of the division to be in possession of the caste property faction F1 cannot maintain a suit against faction F2 for recovery of one half of the caste property or its value (e) Here the subject matter of the suit is caste property and the claim is not against an outsider but against another section of the caste

As regards user of caste property it has been laid down that a majority of a caste has the right to regulate the use of the property and the minority is bound by the resolution of the majority provided the resolution is not so subversive of the interests of the minority as to amount to a complete denial of their rights Thus if the majority of a caste passes a resolution that the caste cart should not be used for feasting any Brahmans and the minority invites Brahmans to a feast in the cart a suit will lie to restrain the minority from using the cart in contravention of the resolution (f)

Suits for inspection of accounts of caste property—Such a suit relates purely to a caste question and it cannot therefore be entertained by a civil Court (g)

Interference with temple property—Removal or alteration of namams or religious marks in a temple which are recognized as the badges of a particular religious denomination amounts to an interference with property and is a ground of action in civil Courts (h)

Interference with right of worship—Suits for a declaration of the right to worship or to offer prayers at a certain place are suits of a civil nature It often happens that the members of a particular class are alone entitled to worship in the sanctuary of a temple and to perform certain portions of the religious worship Such a right is one of a civil nature and it may be enforced by a suit in a civil Court (i)

Right of burial—The right of burial is a civil right and it has accordingly been held that an interference with the rights of the relatives of a deceased Mahomedan to recite prayers over his body before burial in front of a particular mosque being an invasion of a civil right may be enforced by suit (j)

Religious processions—Members of a religious body possess the right to conduct a religious procession with its appropriate observances along a highway and a suit will lie against those who prevent the procession with its observances The worshippers in a mosque or temple which abut on a high road could not compel the processionists to intermit their worship while passing the mosque or temple on the ground that there was continuous worship there But no one sect can claim the exclusive use of the highway for their worship (k)

Suit to set aside election of directors —Such a suit is of a civil nature and the Court is entitled to take cognizance of it The matters involved in such a suit are not matters of internal management of the company (l)

Suit for administration of estate of a living Hindu debtor —Such a suit is not cognizable by a civil Court (m)

Suits expressly barred —The general rule of law is that when a legal right and an infringement thereof are alleged a cause of action is disclosed and unless there is a bar to the entertainment of a suit the ordinary civil Courts are bound to entertain the claim (n) This is in substance the rule laid down in the present section which provides that suits though of a civil nature are not triable by civil Courts if the cognizance of such suits is expressly or impliedly barred By expressly barred is meant barred by any enactment for the time being in force Thus section 11 provides that no Court shall try a suit in which the matter in issue is res judicata and section 47 bars a decree holder from filing a suit when he can take execution proceedings Section 39 of the Income Tax Act provides that no suit shall lie in any civil Court to set aside or modify any assessment made under that Act (o) Similarly the Pensions Act 23 of 1871 s 4 enacts that except as provided by that Act no civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government (p) The cognizance of a suit by a civil Court may also be impliedly barred Thus a suit by a proclaimed person whose property has been attached and sold under ss 87 and 88 of the Criminal Procedure Code 1898 against the auction purchaser for its restoration is impliedly barred by the provisions of that Code the remedies of the proclaimed person being limited to those provided for in the Code (q) The mere fact however that an enactment provides a summary remedy in certain cases does not constitute a bar to a regular suit Thus the provisions of Act 1 of 1871 do not bar a suit for compensation for wrongful seizure of cattle (r) Again a guardian may apply to the Court for possession of his ward under sec 25 of the Act but this does not exclude a suit for that purpose (s) Another instance is O 21 r 95 (Code of 1882 s 318) That rule provides a summary remedy to which a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree may resort to recover possession from a judgment debtor But it does not say that no suit shall lie to recover possession The purchaser may therefore resort to the remedy provided by that section or he may at his option bring a regular suit (t) Further the jurisdiction of a civil Court is not excluded unless the cognizance of the entire suit as brought is barred (u) The general rule is that statutes affecting the jurisdiction of Courts are to be construed so far as possible to avoid the effect of transferring the determination of rights and liabilities from the ordinary Courts to executive officers (t) It is for the party who seeks to oust the jurisdiction of a civil Court to establish his contention (w)

The bar is generally in matters affecting the Government revenue but it has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the jurisdiction of civil Courts to try suits brought by superior holders to recover their dues from inferior holders is not barred by s 85 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code [Act 5 of 1879] (x) The same Court has held that s 4 (c) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act is not a bar to a suit in which there is a claim arising out of the alleged illegality of proceedings taken for the realization of land revenue (y) Some Municipal Acts expressly bar suits relating to the assessment and levy of municipal rates and taxes but the civil Courts have nevertheless jurisdiction to entertain such suits if it is shewn that the assessment is mala fide or perverse ( ) or made on a wrong basis and ultra vires (a) or that the procedure enjoined by the Act has not been followed (b)

Suits impliedly barred—Besides suits of which the cognizance is expressly barred there are suits which are barred by general principles of law such as suits relating to acts of State and public policy A civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain suits in respect of act of State (c) As to suits against the Secretary of State for India see note under sec 79 Act of State No suit will lie to recover costs incurred in a criminal Court (d) Again a suit will not lie for damages for defamatory statements made in the course of a judicial proceeding by a party or by a witness The ground of this principle is that it concerns the public and the administration of justice that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harassed by suits for damages but that the only penalty which they should incur if they give evidence falsely should be an indictment for perjury (e)

Criminal Procedure Code 1898—An order made by a magistrate under section 13? of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be called into question in a civil Court but a suit will lie for a declaration of exclusive ownership of land which a magistrate has declared to be a public highway (f) but not a suit to close the road (g) No suit lie by a proclaimed person against an auction purchaser to recover from him property sold under ss 87 and 88 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (h) But a suit will lie to set aside an irregular sale under section 88 (i) and a civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the recovery from Government of the proceeds of the sale of property attached and sold under ss 523 and 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code (j)

Political questions —The Courts of Briti h India may determine the title of property situated within their juri diction belonging to a Native Prince though a political question is involved (k) But where the real object of the suit is to settle the right of succe sion to the throne and the property right involved is only contingent the Court should decline juri diction (l)

10 [S 12] No Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a pre viously instituted suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title where such suit is pending in the same or any other Court in British India having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor-General in Council and having like jurisdiction, or before His Majesty in Council

Stay of suit

Explanation —The pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit founded on the same cause of action

Alterations in the section —The words proceed with the trial have been substituted for the word try The words except where a suit has been stayed under section 20 which occurred at the commencement of the corre ponding section of the Code of 1882 the words for the same relief which occurred after the words previously instituted suit and the words whether superior or inferior which occurred after the words any other Court have been omitted The words litigating under the ame title are new

Scope and object of the section —The pre ent section provides that where a suit is instituted in a Court to which the Code applie the Court shall not proceed with the trial of the suit if—

first the matter in issue in the suit is al o directly and substantially in issue in a previou ly instituted suit between the same parties

secondly the previously instituted suit is pending—

- (a) in the same Court in which the subsequent suit is brought or
- (b) in any other Court in Briti h India (whether superior inferior or co ordinate) or
- (c) in any Court beyond the limits of British India e tablished or continued by the Governor General in Council or
- (d) before His Majesty in Council and thirdly where the previously instituted suit is pending in any of the Courts men tioned in cl (b) or cl (c) such Court is a Court of jurisdiction competent to grant the relief claimed in the subsequent suit (m)

The object of the section is to prevent Courts of concurrent juri diction from simul taneously trying two parallel suits in respect of the same matter in i sue B re iding in

Calcutta has an agent A at Calicut employed to sell his goods there A sues B in Calicut claiming a balance due upon an account in respect of dealings between him and B During the pendency of the suit in the Calicut Court B institutes a suit against A in Calcutta for an account and for damages caused by A's alleged negligence Here the matter in issue in B's suit is directly and substantially in issue in A's suit further both the suits are between the same parties therefore if the Court at Calicut is a Court of jurisdiction competent to grant the relief claimed in B's suit the Calcutta Court must not proceed with the trial of B's suit and the suit in the Calicut Court being the one instituted prior in point of time should alone be proceeded with (n) But if A was B's agent at Pondicherry instead of at Calicut and the suit was brought by him in the Pondicherry Court the Calcutta Court would not be precluded from proceeding with the trial of B's suit the Pondicherry Court being a foreign Court See the Explanation to the section

The section does not of course empower one Court to stay the proceedings of another Court A district Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction under the Provincial Insolvency Act 5 of 1920 cannot under this section stay a suit pending against the insolvent in a subordinate Court (o)

Whether the subject matter of both suits must be the same—S 12 of the Code of 1882 contained the words for the same relief after the words previously instituted suit Hence it was necessary for the application of the section not only that the matter in issue in the second suit should also be directly and substantially in issue in the first suit but that the second suit must be for the same relief as that claimed in the first suit (p) The words for the same relief have been omitted in the present section The omission of these words however does not alter the law as it stood under the old section It does not follow because the words the same relief are no longer in the section that sec 10 is applicable to suits for recovery of successive rents It is necessary for the application of the decision that the subject matter of both suits must be the same (q) A suit could not be stayed even if the main issue in both the suits was the same if the subject matter of the second suit was different from that of the first suit (r) A previous suit for rent or for pension or for any other recurring liability for a particular year is no bar to the trial of a subsequent suit for rent or for pension or other recurring liability for a subsequent year It is however different if the first suit is for dissolution of partnership and for accounts and the subsequent suit is by one of the partners for the return of a deposit In such a case the second suit is barred (s)

Previously instituted suit—Note that it is the pendency of the previously instituted suit that constitutes a bar to the trial of the subsequent suit The word suit includes appeal It also includes an appeal to His Majesty in Council (t) But it does not include an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council for the application may not be granted at all and if granted the applicant may not prefer any appeal (u) It seems that it does not also include applications under s 47 (v)

Shall not proceed with the trial—These words indicate the action to be taken by the Court under this section The second suit is not to be dismissed as barred it s only the trial of the suit that is not to be proceeded with That may render the institution of a subsequent suit unneces ary in many cases but the section is no bar to the institution of such suit Nay there are cases in which it is necessary for a party to institute a regular suit to establish a right claimed by him and failure to institute the suit within the period of limitation may preclude the party from asserting the right in any other suit or proceeding Suits referred to in O 21 r 63 (Code of 1882 s 283) are suits of this character This section does not dispense with the necessity of instituting such suits (w) A suit may be stayed under this section even after the hearing has commenced (x)

Between the same parties—The mere fact that the first suit is between Z and J as plaintiffs and W X and Y as defendants and the second suit is between W as plaintiff and Z J and S (not a party to the first suit) as defendants will not take the case out of the operation of this section if the other conditions of the section are satisfied (y)

Interlocutory orders pending stay—A stay order under this section does not take away the power of the Court in the stayed suit to make interlocutory orders such as orders for a receiver or an injunction or an attachment before judgment ( )

Contract providing for place of suing—There is nothing in this section to prevent the Court from giving effect to an agreement that suits in respect of transactions between the parties to the agreement should be brought in the High Court or Small Cause Court of Bombay (a)

Revision—The Madras and Lahore High Courts hold that an order under this section is open to revision (b) but not so the Allahabad High Court (c) The High Court can interfere under sec 15 of the Charter (d)

Inherent power to grant stay—See notes to O 39 r 1

11 [S 13] No Court shall try any suit (p 35) or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue (pp 38 42) has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit (p 36) between the same parties (p 55), or between parties under whom they or any of them claim (p 56), litigating under the same title (p 62), in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised (p 63), and has been heard and finally decided (p 69) by such Court

Explanation II—For the purposes of this section, the competence of a Court shall be determined irrespective of any provisions as to a right of appeal from the decision of such Court (p 68)

Explanation III—The matter above referred to must in the former suit have been alleged by one party and either denied or admitted, expressly or impliedly, by the other (p 38)

Explanation IV—Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit (p 44)

Explanation V—Any relief claimed in the plaint, which is not expressly granted by the decree, shall, for the purposes of this section be deemed to have been refused (p 74)

Explanation VI—Where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a public right or of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating (p 58)

Alterations in the section—

1 Explanation I is new See notes under the head Former suit p 36 below

2 Explanation II is also new See note p 68 below

3 Explanation IV to s 13 of the Code of 1882 has been omitted The reason of the omission is stated to be that it was liable to misconstruction and that the law was well established apart from the Explanation The words of the Explanation if literally interpreted would relieve parties from the bar of res judicata whenever there existed a latent power of alteration sec s 149 O 20 r 3 and O 20 r 11

4 The words public right have been added into Explanation VI in view of the provisions of section 91 relating to public nuisances

Res judicata—The present section deals with the doctrine of res judicata The leading case on the subject is the Duchess of Kingstone's case (e) and the following classic passage from the judgment of Sir William de Grey is a statement of the leading principles of res judicata —

From the variety of cases relative to judgment being given in evidence in civil suits these two deductions seem to follow as generally true first that a judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction directly speaking on the point is as a plea a bar or as evidence conclusive between the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another Court secondly that the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction directly on the point is in like manner conclusive upon the same matter between the same parties coming incidentally in question in another Court for a different purpose

(e) 2 Smith's L C 731

But neither the judgment of a Court of concurrent or exclusive juri diction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question though within their jurisdiction nor of any matter incidentally cognizable nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment

This passage summarizes the law enacted in this ection The rule of res judicata is readily distinguished from the rule in section 10 for the latter relates to a res sub judice that is a matter which is pending judicial inquiry while the rule in the present section relates to res judicata that i a matter adjudicated upon or a matter on which judgment has been pronounced Section 10 bars the trial of a suit in which the matter directly and substantially in i sue is pending adjudication in a previous suit The present section bars the trial of a suit or an i sue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has already been adjudicated upon in a previous suit Thus if A sues B for damages for breach of contract and the suit is dismissed a subsequent suit by A against B for damages for breach of the same contract is barred This is the rule of res judicata stated in its simplest form The question of A s right to claim damages from B having been decided in the previous suit it becomes res judicata and it cannot therefore be tried in another suit It would be useless and vexatious to subject B to another suit for the same cau e Moreover public policy requires that there should be an end of litigation The question whether the decision is correct or erroneous has no bearing on the question whether it operates or does not operate as res judicata (f) otherwise every decision would be impugned as erroneous and there would be no finality (g) The rule of res judi cata may thus be put upon two grounds—the one the hardship to the individual that he should be vexed twice for the same cause and the other public policy that it is in the interest of the State that there should be an end of litigation (h) Putting it in another form it may be said that every suit must be sustained by a cause of action and there is no cause of action to sustain the second suit of A it being merged in the judg ment in the first (i)

Res judicata and estoppel—Pes judicata is sometimes treated as part of the doctrine of estoppel but the two are essentially different Estoppel is part of the law of evidence and prevents a man from saying one thing one time and the opposite thing at another time while res judicata precludes a man from avowing the same thing in successive litigations (j) Mahmud J in Sita Ram v Amir Begum (k) said — Perhaps the shortest way to describe the difference between the two is to say that while the plea of res judicata prohibits the Court from entering into an inquiry at all as to a matter already adjudicated upon an estoppel prohibits a party after an inquiry has been entered upon from proving anything which would contradict his own previou declaration or acts to the prejudice of another party who relying upon these declarations and acts ha altered his position In other words res judicata prohibits an inquiry in limine while estoppel is only a piece of evidence

Suit—Section 11 applies in terms to cases where the matter in issue in a subse quent suit was in i sue in a former suit A suit is a proceeding which is com menced by a plaint (s 26) The section is not exhaustive and the doctrine of res judicata has been extended to adjudications in proceedings other than suits see note section not exhaustive on p 76 below Some cases extending the doctrine beyond the limits of the Code have given a more extensive meaning to the word suit Thus when probate was refused after a contentious proceeding the judgment was held to operate as re judicata for sec 29ɔ of the Indian Succession Act 1925 requires the proceeding to take the form as far as possible of a suit (l) On the other hand although an application to file a private award is required by Sch II para. 20 to be numbered and registered as a suit a refusal to file a private award has been held not to operate as res judicata (m) In a case decided under s 10 of the Code it was said suit is a very comprehensive term It includes any proceeding in a Court of Justice by which the party pursues the remedy which the law gives him If a right is litigated between parties in a Court of Justice the proceeding by which the decision of the Court is sought is a suit (n)

Former suit —The expression former suit means a previou ly decided suit and the same interpretation applies to appeals Explanation I confirms previous decisions to the same effect (o) It matters not that the previously decided suit was instituted subsequently (p)

Suits tried together—one judgment —There is a conflict of decisions as to whether if two suits involving common issues are disposed of in one judgment and an appeal is fil d against the decree in one and not in the other the matter decided in the latter suit becomes res judicata so that it cannot be reopened in the appeal It has been held in Allahabad (q) Calcutta (r) Patna (s) and Rangoon (t) that the rule of res judicata applies while in Madras (u) and Lahore (v) that it does not In Zaharia v Debia (w) two rival suits for pre emption in respect of the same sale were brought by two claimants A and B each of whom asserted as against the other that he had a paramount title to pre empt A was made a party defendant in B s suit and B was made a party defendant in A s suit A s suit was decreed and B s suit was dismissed B appealed from the decree in his own suit but he did not prefer any appeal from the decree in A s suit The Allahabad High Court held that B having failed to appeal from the decision in A s suit the decision had become final and operated as res judicata and could not be retried in B s appeal with the possible result that there might be two in consistent decrees on the files of the Court The contrary view was at one time taken by the Cal utta High Court (x) and in one case (y) it was said that the two suits being tried together neither could be said to be the former suit in relation to the other In one of these cases ( ) A sued B for possession alleging B to be a monthly tenant while B sued A for a declaration that he held under a lease for a term of which two years were still to run Both suits were tried together and one judgment was given finding B to be a monthly tenant there were two decrees one in A s suit for pos ession and the other in B s suit dismissing it B appealed in A s suit but not in his own suit A contended that B s appeal was barred by the decree in his own suit from which he had not appealed but the Court held that the decree did not operate as res judicata These decisions were dissented from in a later case and it was held that the rule of res judicata applies so as to bar the appeal (a) It is submitted that the Madras and Lahore decisions are correct

In Damodhar Das v Sheo Ram Das (b) there was one original suit for an account and cross appeals from the decree in that suit which resulted in two appellate decrees The plaintiff filed a second appeal from the decree in his appeal but not from the decree in the defendant s appeal A preliminary objection was raised that the decree in defendant s appeal having become final the plaintiff s appeal was barred by res judicata The Allahabad High Court overruled the objection on the ground that the two decrees were substantially one decree The same question came before a Full Bench of the same Court in Ghansham Singh v Bhola Singh (c) There was a preliminary decree for sale in a suit on a mortgage which disallowed plaintiff s costs and also disallowed defendant s claim that the interest was excessive Both parties appealed and both appeals were allowed in one judgment and two decrees The plaintiff filed a second appeal against the decree allowing interest in defendant s appeal but as the decree in his own appeal was in his favour he filed no appeal against it The Court held that the decree that was not appealed against did not operate as res judicata The ratio decidendi was that a party is not bound to appeal from a decision which is not prejudicial to him The Full Bench said that Zaharia Debia (d) was correctly decided on its own facts In a still later case on the same point a Division Bench of the same High Court reverted to the reason given in Damodhar Das v Sheo Ram that decrees in cross appeals in the same suit are substantially one decree (e)

Suits tried together—separate judgments —If two cross suits are tried together and the same issue is tried and disposed of in two separate judgments the omission to appeal from the decree in one suit will make the decree in the other res judicata so as to bar the appeal (f)

Conditions of res judicata —It is not every matter decided in a former suit that can be pleaded as res judicata in a subsequent suit To constitute a matter res judicata the following conditions must concur

I —The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit or issue must be the same matter which was directly and substantially in issue either actually (Explanation III) or constructively (Explanation IV) in the former suit (pp 38 55)

II —The former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim Explanation VI is to be read with this Condition (pp 55 61)

III —The parties as aforesaid must have litigated under the same title in the former suit (pp 62 63)

IV —The Court which decided the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue is subsequently raised Explanation II is to be read with this Condition (pp 63 69)

V —The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must have been heard and finally decided by the Court in the first suit Explanation V is to be read with this Condition (pp 69 76)

CONDITION I

Matter directly and substantially in issue

Matters in issue may be classified as follows —

A Matter actually in issue

Cause of action distinguished from matter directly and substantially in issue—The expression used in s 2 of the Code of 1859 was cause of action As to that expression their Lordships of the Privy Council said in Krishna Behari Roy v Brojeswari Choudranee (g) The expression cannot be taken in its literal and most restricted sense but however that may be by the general law where a material issue has been tried and determined between the same parties in a proper suit and in a competent Court as to the status of one of them in relation to the other it cannot in their opinion be tried again in another suit between them The expression matter directly and substantially in issue was first introduced in the corresponding section (s 13) of the Code of 1877

Matter directly and substantially in issue Explanation III—It is not enough to constitute a matter res judicata that it was in issue in the former suit It is further necessary that it must have been in issue directly and substantially A matter cannot be said to have been directly and substantially in issue in a suit unless it was alleged by one party and denied or admitted either expressly or by necessary implication by the other It is not enough that the matter was alleged by one party (h) At the same time it is not necessary to constitute a matter directly and substantially in issue that a distinct issue should have been raised upon it it is sufficient if the matter was in issue in substance (i) The application of the rule [of res judicata] by the Courts in India should be influenced by no technical considerations of form but by matter of substance within the limits allowed by law (j) Thus if there is a mutual account between A and B and A sues B and obtains a decree on the account a subsequent suit by B against A on the same account for the same year though beginning and ending about a month earlier will be barred as res judicata (k) On the same principle an issue will be res judicata if the judgment of an appellate Court shows that the issue was treated as material and was decided although the decree passed merely affirms the decree of the lower Court which did not deal with the issue (l)

Matter collaterally or incidentally in issue—Every suit must involve a matter directly and substantially in issue It may also involve a matter collaterally

or incidentally in issue To constitute a matter res judicata it is necessary that it must be in issue directly and substantially in the suit under trial and that it must have been in issue also directly and substantially as distinguished from collaterally or incidentally in a former suit

All matters involved in a suit may be directly and substantially in issue but they cannot all be collaterally or incidentally in issue A collateral or incidental issue is one that is ancillary to a direct and substantive issue the former is an auxiliary issue the latter the principal issue The expression collaterally or incidentally in issue implies that there is another matter which is directly and substantially in issue

Distinction between matter directly and substantially in issue and matter collaterally or incidentally in issue—The leading case on the subject is Barrs v Jackson (m) Every suit must involve a matter or matters in respect of which relief is claimed by the plaintiff It may also involve matters which though there is no relief claimed in respect of them are brought in issue for the purpose of deciding matters in respect of which relief is claimed

Matter directly and substantially in issue—Every matter in respect of which relief is claimed in a suit is necessarily a matter directly and substantially in issue

Illustrations

1 A sues B for the rent due for the year 1907 The defence is that no rent is due Here the claim for rent is the matter in respect of which relief is claimed This therefore is a matter directly and substantially in issue

2 A sues B (1) for a declaration of title to certain land and (2) for the rent of those lands B denies A s title to the lands and contends that no rent is due Here there are two matters in respect of which relief is claimed namely (1) the matter of title and (2) the claim for rent Both these are matters directly and substantially in issue

Matter collaterally or incidentally in issue—A matter in respect of which no relief is claimed but which is put in issue for the purpose of enabling the Court to adjudicate on a matter in respect of which relief is claimed may be directly and substantially in issue or it may be in issue collaterally or incidentally It would be a matter directly and substantially in issue if it was necessary to decide it to adjudicate on the principal issue and if it was decided in fact the judgment was based upon that decision otherwise it would be a matter collaterally or incidentally in issue A matter cannot be directly and substantially in issue if the judgment would be correct whether that matter exists or not

Illustration

A sues B for rent B pleads abatement of rent on the ground that the area is less than that entered in the lease The Court finds that the area is greater than that shewn in the lease The finding as to the excess area is not res judicata for it is only ancillary to the direct and substantial issue whether the area is equal to that shewn in the lease or less (n)

Examination of pleadings and judgment—Whether a matter was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit is to be determined by a reference to the plaint the written statement the issues and judgment The decree may also be referred to but it is not enough to refer to the decree without the judgment for a decree states merely how a suit is disposed of and it is in the judgment that the findings on the issues are recorded (o) The judgment is admissible under s 40 of the Evidence Act See O 20 rr 5 and 6

Suits for rent or other recurring liability—The distinction between a matter directly and substantially in issue and a matter collaterally in issue is well illustrated by suits for rent or for other recurring liability These may be divided into three classes namely —

A —Where the first suit is for rent and the subsequent suit is for title

B —Where both suits are for rent or other recurring liability

C —Where both suits relate to rate of rent or to the area for which rent is payable

A First suit for rent subsequent suit for title —In this class of cases it is clear that the subsequent suit being one for title the question of title is a matter directly and substantially in issue in that suit Whichever party therefore raises the plea of res judicata in that suit must show that the question of title was also directly and substantially in issue in the former suit that is in the previously decided suit If the question of title was in issue in its entirety in the former suit it would be a matter that was directly and substantially in issue in that suit But if the issue in the former suit did not cover the entire question of title in other words if it fell short of going to the very root of the title and was confined only to some of the incidents of title the question of title would be a matter which was collaterally or incidentally in issue in the former suit (p).

In the following illustrations it is assumed that the other conditions of res judicata are fulfilled

2 Whether any and if so what rent is due from B ?

The Court finds that A is the chela and heir of the mohunt It also finds Rs 2 ,00 due by B for rent and A's claim is decreed became entitled to it by survivorship C is thereupon joined as a defendant to the suit The issues are—

Subsequently C sues the widow for a declaration that he and his brother were joint and claims the said property by right of survivorship The question whether the decea ed and C were joint or separate is not res judicata for it was not directly and substantially in issue in the former suit It was in issue in that suit only collaterally or incidentally for it will be seen on referring to the first issue in that suit that it did not cover the entire question of C s title but related merely to the joint or separate receipt of rent Run Bahadur v Lucho Koer (1885) 11 Cal 301 12 I A 23 Srihari v Khitish Chandara (1897) 24 Cal 569

B Both suits for rent or other recurring liability —The rules which apply to the preceding class of cases apply also to this class Thus where A sues B for rent due for a particular period and the defence is that A has no title to the land of which the rent is claimed then if a direct issue is raised and decided on the question of title the decision will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against B for the rent for a subsequent period either of the same (q) or other (r) property held under the same title But if there is no direct issue raised on the question of title and the finding falls short of going to the very root of the title upon which the claim for rent is based it will not have the effect of res judicata If the question of title is gone into in the previous suit as if the right of rent were sought to be established not for one particular year but once for all it will be said to have been directly and substantially in issue But if the question of title is gone into in the previous suit as if the right of rent were sought to be established not once for all but for one particular year it will be said to have been in issue collaterally or incidentally The same principles apply to other cases of recurring liability such as malikana (s) maintenance (t) interest (u) annuity (v) &c

A sues B for rent due for the year 1903 The defence is that the land is rent free An issue is raised whether the land is rent free The Court finds that the land is rent free and A s suit is dismissed Subsequently A sues B claiming rent for the year 1904 B again sets up the same defence namely that the land is rent free Here the question of A s right to recover the rent having been directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit the suit for the rent for 1904 is barred as res judicata Rakhal Doss v Heera (1874) 22 W R 282 Venkatachalapati v Krishna (1890) 13 Mad 287 Vishnu v Ramling (1902) 26 Bom 25 Natesa v Venkatarama (1907) 30 Mad 510 Dwarka Das v Akhay Singh (1908) 30 All 470

It may here be observed that each year s rent is in itself a separate and entire cause of action and where a suit is brought for the rent due for a particular year a judgment obtained in that suit whatever the defence may have been would seem only to extend to the subject matter of the suit and hence the landlord is at liberty to bring another suit for the next y ar s rent and the tenant is at liberty to set up to that suit any defence he thinks proper The above proposition however is subject to this and here comes in the doctrine of res judicata that neither party is at liberty to re open in the suit for rent for the next year any question that was substantially and necessarily tried and determined between them in the suit for rent for the previous year (w) For the essence of the doctrine of res judicata is that where a material issue has been tried and determined between the same parties in a proper suit and in a competent Court as to the status of one of them in relation to the other or as to a right or title claimed by either of them against the other it cannot again be tried in another suit between them (x)

Maintenance — As regards maintenance it is to be noted that a decree for maintenance at a particular rate is no bar to a sub equent suit for maintenance at an enhanced rate on the ground of altered circumstances for the rate of maintenance is a variable quantity changing from time to time according to the circumstances of the parties affected by the decree (y) But a right to maintenance may be barred by res judicata ( )

C —Rate of rent or area for which rent is payable —In this class of cases also both suits are for rent the first suit being for rent for a particular period and the second for rent for a subsequent period The matter which is pleaded as res judicata is not the plaintiff s title to the land of which the rent is claimed but the rate of rent or the area for which rent is payable If the Court in the first suit tries and determines the issue what is the proper rate of rent or what is the proper area for which rent is payable the issue relates not merely to the rent for a particular period but to the rent payable for the full term of the lease and the question as to the rate of rent or the area as the ca e may be will be res judicata in subsequent suits for rent for the remaining period of the lease (a)

Ex parte decree —Ex parte decrees operate to render the matter decided res judicata (b) and the defendant s failure to appear will not deprive the plaintiff of the full benefit of his decree (c) But in the case of a suit in which a decree is pa sed ex parte [see O 9 r 6 Code of 1882 s 100] the only matter that can be directly and substantially in i sue is the matter in respect of which relief has been claimed by the plaintiff in the plaint A matter in re pect of which no relief is claimed cannot be directly and sub tantially in i sue in a suit in which a decree is pa ed ex parte though the Court may have gone out of its way and declared the plaintiff to be entitled to relief in respect of such matter entitled to rent at the rate of Rs 2 per square yard the question of rate would not be res judicata for A had not asked for a declaration in that suit in respect of the rate of rent A s claim in the former suit was merely for arrears of rent amounting to Rs 500 and the decree in that suit has no greater effect than evidence that Rs 500 was due when the decree was passed Had A in the former suit al o prayed for a declaration in respect of the rate of rent as part of the substantive relief and had the Court then declared that the rate of rent was Rs 2 the question of rate would have been res judicata though the decree was pas ed ex parte for it would then have been a matter directly and substantially in issue Modhusudun v Brae (1889) 16 Cal 300

A suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud may be barred by res judicata if an application to set it aside on the same ground has been dismissed under O 9 r 13 See note under that rule Ex parte decree obtained by fraud.

Decree for injunction and res judicata—A sues B for an injunction restraining B from doing certain act The injunction is granted B repeats the acts complained of in the suit A again sues B for an injunction The suit i barred as res judicata for the relief claimed is covered by the injunction granted in the former suit and A s remedy i to proceed against B in execution of the decree [O 21 r 32] Where the decree is pa sed by a chartered High Court A may proceed against B for contempt (d) See notes to s 50 below

Decree for restitution of conjugal rights and res judicata—A sues B his wife for restitution of conjugal rights Restitution is granted and B goes and lives with A (that is to say the decree is sati fied) B again leaves A and A again sues B for the same relief The suit is not barred as res judicata (e) The distinction between this and the case of an injunction is that while in a suit for injunction the defendant is for ever restrained from doing the acts complained of the wife cannot be directed in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights to live with her husband for the rest of her life for many things may occur entitling her to leave him e g gross cruelty

Decree for possession conditional on payment of dower—Where in a suit by the heirs of a Mahomedan against his widow in possession of his estate in lieu of her dower a decree is passed against her that they should have possession of their shares of the e tate upon payment of a proportionate part of the dower debt within six months and that upon failure to pay their suit should be dismissed and the plaintiffs fail to pay within six months the decree is no bar to a subsequent suit for immediate possession by the same plaintiffs against the widow on the ground that the dower debt had in the meantime been satisfied out of the income of the estate in the hands of the widow (f)

Subject matter of suits may be different — As the test of res judicata is the matter directly and sub tantially in issue it follows that the subject matter of the econd suit may be entirely different Thus if A claims certain property as the adopted son of X and the defendant denies the adoption a finding in A s favour on the is ue as to adoption will be binding on the defendant as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against the same defendant to recover another property claimed under the same title (g) It is not open to the defendant to contend that the propertie claimed in the two suits being different the decision on the question of A s adoption in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the second On the same principle where in a suit brought by A against B for po ession of one of two properties compri ed in a sale deed pa sed by B to A B contends that the deed is fictitious and the Court finds that the deed is fictitious the finding that the sale deed is invalid will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against B to recover the other property under the same sale deed (h) Similarly in the illustration cited under class B of rent suits (p 41 above) it is no answer to the plea of res judicata that the subject matters of the two suits are different The reason is that the matter directly and substantially in issue in both the suits is the same namely whether the particular land of which the rent is claimed is rent free and the decision therefore on that is uo in the first suit operates as res judicata in the subsequent suit But the deci ion cannot apply to other lands unless they form part of the same tenure (i)

From the same fundamental principle that the matter directly and sub tantially in i sue and not the subject matter constitutes the test of res judicata it also follows that where a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit is not the same as that in a previously decided suit the trial of that matter will not be barred as res judicata though the subject matter of the two suits may be the same (j)

Where both the matter directly and substantially in issue and the subject matter are the same in both the suits the matter in i sue will be res judicata not because of the identity of the subject matter but because of the identity of the matter directly and substantially in issue (k) Where the matter directly and substantially in issue and the subject matter are both different in the two suits the matter in issue is not res ju licata not because the subject matters are different but becau e the matters directly and substantially in issue in the two suits are different (l)

B Matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or defence

Matter constructively in issue Explanation IV—A matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence is a matter which is constructively in issue In the cases cited in the note under A—actually in issue Explanation III the matters were actually in issue for they were actually alleged by one party and denied by the other It often happens however that a matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack by the plaintiff to substantiate the relief claimed by him in the suit is not alleged by him as a ground of attack and also that a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence by the defendant is not set up as a ground of defence A matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or defence in the former suit but which has not been alleged as a ground of attack or defence will be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit (Explanation IV) that is to say though it has not been actually in issue directly and substantially it will be regarded as having been constructively in issue directly and substantially This section draws no distinction between the claim that was actually made in a suit and the claim that might and ought to have been made If the parties had an opportunity of controverting it that is the same thing as if the matter had been actually controverted and decided (m) The plea of res judicata applies except in special cases not only to points on whi h the Court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and to pronounce judgment but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of the litigation and which the parties exercising reasonable diligence might have brought forward at the time (n)

Where a matter has been actually in issue it is necessary to constitute the matter res judicata that it should have been heard and finally decided But where a matter has been constructively in issue it could not from the very nature of the case be heard and decided and it will be deemed to have been heard and decided against the party omitting to allege it This is in accordance with the view of the section taken by the High Courts of Allahabad and Bombay (o) In Kailash Mondal v Baroda Sundari Dasi (p) Banerjee J observed that though a matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or defence should be deemed as provided by Explanation IV to have been directly and substantially in issue yet it could not be deemed to have been heard and finally decided as there was nothing in Explanation IV to suggest that such matter should also be deemed to have been heard and finally decided This view was followed in a subsequent case (q) but it is obviously incorrect and it was rejected by the same Court in later cases (r) and it has been dissented from by the High Court of Lahore (s) Moreover in a recent case the Judicial Committee took exception to the language in which the observations of Banerjee J were couched saying that the language was not so careful as it might have been (t) The Privy Council case illustrates the rigidity with which the principle laid down in Explanation IV is to be applied In that case it was held that where a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of attack is not raised in the plaint and an application is afterwards made to amend the plaint but it is refused the matter will be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in that suit See ill 4 below

Test.—The question whether a matter might have been made a ground of attack or defence in the former suit rarely presents any difficulty Whether it ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence depends on the facts of each case As a general rule every ground of attack with reference to the title sued on must be pleaded if necessary in the alternative (u) for the plaintiff will not be allowed to make out a fresh case afterwards Thus if a plaintiff sues for possession on the ground of ownership and his suit is dismissed he cannot afterwards claim possession as mortgagee for it was an alternative ground of attack which he did not raise in the first suit (v) If the matter raised as a defence would have defeated varied or in any way affected the decree in the previous suit it ought to have been raised (w) Conversely if the decree in the previous suit is inconsistent with a defence which ought to have been raised that defence must be deemed to have been raised and finally decided and is barred by res judicata (x) If a matter could have been set up as a ground of attack or defence in the former suit and if its introduction into that suit was necessary for a complete and final decision of the right claimed by the plaintiff therein it will be deemed to be a matter which ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence in that suit unless the matters in that and the subsequent suit are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion (y) Thus in ill (1) on page 45 the title by heirship could have been made a ground of attack in the alternative in the first suit it was necessary to do so for the complete and final disposal of all questions as to A s right to the property and it was not forbidden by any rule of pleading and further the question in both suits being the same namely whether A was entitled to the property or B the title by survivorship and the title by heirship could not be said to be so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion It may appear at first sight that the two matters are dissimilar for the title by survivorship and the title by heirship have to be supported by different evidence But the test of evidence which was relied on in some old cases ( ) is not a satisfactory test and though it was advanced in argument in two cases before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council no notice was taken of it in the judgments (a) The reason is when a plaintiff sets up alternative ground of attack or when a defendant sets up alternative grounds of defence the evidence in support of such alternative grounds would in most cases be different But it has been said where the evidence in support of one ground is such as might be destructive of the other ground the two grounds need not be set up in the same suit The reason given is that the test of determining whether both the grounds ought to have been set up in the same suit is afforded by the provision of O 2 r 1 and the provisions of that rule as to the framing of suits are only to be applied as far as practicable (b)

It is clear that it cannot be said of any matter that it ought to have been set up as a ground of attack in a former suit if its introduction would have been incongruous to the matter of that suit (c) Thus a person claiming property on the allegation that it is wakf property and that he is the manager thereof is not bound to claim the same property in the same suit alternatively in his own right in the event of its being held that the property was not wakf property Having asserted that the property was wakf property [he] could not have consistently claimed the same property as [his] personal property except possibly in an alternative form [He was] however not under an obligation to adopt the latter course The mere fact that he could have claimed the property in the alternative as his own property is no ground for saying that he ought to have done so (d) Where a person who is joined as a defendant in a mortgage suit as being interested in the equity of redemption is entitled to the property by a paramount title but his title is not disputed in the plaint he is not bound to set it up as a ground of defence in that suit (e) See note to O 34 r 1 Persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption

The decisions bearing on this branch of the subject are numerous An examination of these decisions leads to the following four Rules

Rule I —Where the right claimed in both suits is the same the subsequent suit will be barred as res judicata though the right in the sub equent suit is sought to be established by a title different from that in the first suit

The dismissal however of a plaintiff s suit for the recovery of land based on an alleged lease is no bar to a subsequent suit for the recovery of the same land on the strength of his general title the reason given being that the legal relation put forward in the sub sequent suit is different from that in the former suit [see ill. (5)]

In the following illustrations it is assumed that the other conditions of res judicata are fulfilled.

2. A and B two Hindu brothers divide the whole of the joint family property except a garden. A dies leaving a widow who sells A's half share in the garden to C. After the death of the widow C sues B for partition of the garden and an ex parte decree is passed under which he (C) enters into possession of a moiety of the garden. B then sues C to recover possession of the moiety sold by A's widow to C alleging that the sale was made by the widow without legal necessity and that on the death of the widow he became entitled to the moiety as the reversionary heir of A. 3. A mortgagee who holds the mortgaged property also as lessee from the mortgagor sues the mortgagor to recover Rs 3 000 being the amount of the mortgage debt. At the date of the suit the mortgagee owes Rs 4 000 to the mortgagor for rent under the lease and this sum the mortgagor claims to set off against the mortgage debt under an express agreement in that behalf. The agreement is not proved and a decree is passed against the mortgagor for Rs 3 000. The property is sold in execution of the decree and it is purchased by the mortgagee with the leave of the Court. The mortgagor then sues the mortgagee to have the sale set aside and for a declaration that the mortgage debt is extinguished now claiming that a general account may be taken as between him and the mortgagee and that in taking such account the rent due to him may be set off against the mortgage debt. The suit is barred for the mortgagor might and ought to have set up that claim in the alternative in the former suit. Mahabir Pershad v Macnaghten (1889) 16 Cal 682 16 I A 107

The right of pre emption not being a vested and ascertained right when B filed his written statement in the former suit it could not have been properly pleaded by B as an answer to the claim for redemption in that suit. Ram Chand v Durga Prasad (1904) 26 All 61

Rule IV—It cannot be said of a relief which if claimed in the first suit would have made that suit bad for multifariousness that it ought to have been made a ground of attack in that suit (l)

Suits on mortgage—If a mortgagee in a suit for redemption against him by the mortgagor omits to obtain an order for sale of the mortgaged property on failure of payment by the mortgagor of the mortgage debt within the time allowed for redemption he will be precluded from bringing a separate suit for sale in default of payment by the mortgagor within that time The mortgagee might and ought to have claimed the right of sale in the suit for redemption brought against him (m) So also if the mortgagee omits to ask for a personal decree against the mortgagor he cannot do so in a subsequent suit on the same mortgage (n)

A prior mortgagee who is made a party to a suit brought by a subsequent mortgagee on his mortgage is not bound to set up his claim under his prior mortgage unless his mortgage is impugned or unless it is sought to be postponed to the subsequent mortgage. If the prior mortgage is not attacked or sought to be postponed to the subsequent mortgage the prior mortgagee is outside the controversy of the suit and he is entitled to bring a suit for sale on his own mortgage even though he may not have appeared in the suit that was brought by the subsequent mortgagee. As regards a subsequent mortgagee the rule is that if he is made a party to a suit on a mortgage prior to his own he ought to claim his right to redeem the prior mortgage and if he omits to do so he cannot afterwards sue for redemption of the mortgage he omitted to plead in that suit (o).

If a mortgagee has successive mortgages of the same property from the same person there is a conflict of decisions whether he can obtain an order for sale on one alone. The Bombay High Court has held that if a mortgagee sues on a subsequent mortgage without reference to a prior mortgage he is barred by Explanation IV as he might and ought to have included the prior mortgage in his suit (p). Similarly the Madras High Court has held that a suit on a prior mortgage bars a suit on a subsequent mortgage of the same property (q). But it was held that a mortgagee might sue on a later mortgage reserving his rights on a prior mortgage (r). In Madras there was a conflict of decisions at one time which was set at rest by a decision of the Full Bench in Subramania v Balasubramania (s) which adopted the above view. In doing so the Full Bench followed the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Sundar Singh v Bholu (t) which held that the two mortgages constituted different causes of action. This view is correct and has been generally followed (u). But as it is a hardship on the mortgagor that his property should be sold twice it is now provided by the Transfer of Property Amendment Act that a mortgagee having several mortgages of the same property from the same person must sell all or none.

In suits for redemption foreclosure or sale there ought to be a complete and final settlement of all accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee right up to the time of actual redemption foreclosure or sale as the case may be (v). A mortgagor therefore who has obtained a decree for redemption against a mortgagee in possession and paid what was due according to the decree and obtained possession cannot afterwards sue for profits realized by the mortgagee for a period prior to the delivery of possession. Such profits might and ought to have been taken into account at the time of passing the decree (w). Similarly where a mortgagor deposits the mortgage money in Court under sec 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and obtains a decree for possession from a usufructuary mortgagee under sec 62 he cannot subsequently sue for

Suits for partition —If in a previous suit for partition some of the properties are left out by mistake or with the consent of the parties a subsequent suit for partition of those properties is not barred but it will be barred if they were excluded by the Court from partition after a contest between the parties on the ground that they are incapable of partition (y)

Subject-matter may be different —It is not necessary for Explanation IV to be applicable that both the issue and the subject matter of the two suits should be the same It is enough if the matters in issue are the same otherwise in suits for arrears of rent there could be no res judicata at all for the subject matters of successive suits for arrears of rent are necessarily different (z) See note under the same heading at page 43 supra

Issue of law —This section provides that no Court shall try any suit or issue etc Issues are of three kinds (1) issues of fact (2) issues of law and (3) mixed issues of law and fact An issue of fact may be res judicata A mixed issue of law and fact may also be res judicata (a) An issue of law it has been held may or may not be res judicata The law on the subject may be summarized as follows —

(1) A decision on an issue of law operates as res judicata if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is the same as that in the first suit (b) It is immaterial that the decision was erroneous in law (c) See ill (1) below

(2) There is a conflict of decisions whether if the causes of action in the two suits are different an erroneous decision on a question of law operates as res judicata It has been held in some cases that it does not (d) [ill (2)] and in some that it does (e) [ill (3)] The latter view was adopted by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Tarini Charan v Kedar Nath (f) The judgment proceeded on the broad ground that the correctness or otherwise of a judicial decision has no bearing upon the question whether it does or does not operate as res judicata It was also pointed out that it was the identity of the matter directly and substantially in issue that was the test of res judicata and not the identity of the cause of action It was contended in that case that the law had been altered by judicial decisions since the judgment in the first suit and reliance was placed upon the judgment of Maclean C J in Alimunnissa v Shama Charan (g) where it was said Cases must be decided upon the law as it stands when judgment is pronounced and not upon what it was at the date of the previous suit the law having been altered in the meantime It has been conceded that if the law had been altered in the meantime by statute the objection [of res judicata] could not prevail it is difficult to see why it should prevail because the law has been since determined to be otherwise by judicial decisions. Referring to this passage Rankin C J observed in the Full Bench case that the reasoning in Alumunnissa s case was erroneous The learned Judge said The legislature by statute may alter the rights of parties and when it does so it makes such provision as it thinks proper to prevent injustice Courts of law are in no way authorized to alter the rights of parties They propose at all events to ascertain the law and if the binding character of a decision upon a concrete question as to the terms of a particular holding is to fluctuate with every alteration in the current of authority the Court will become an instrument for the unsettlement of rights rather than for the ascertainment thereof The principle relied upon is abhorrent to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code and to the general intention of the doctrine of res judicata At the same time the learned Judge observed that when a plea of res judicata is raised with reference to a point of law which concerns questions of jurisdiction (h) or procedure or limitation and in which besides the parties the Courts and the public have an interest it was at least a question whether special considerations should not apply

(3) There is no doubt as observed by Rankin C J that if the law is altered by the passing of a new Act after a decision in a case the decision cannot operate as res judicata Thus in Lakshmi v Atal (i) after a preliminary decree for sale had been passed on a mortgage and before a final decree was made the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act 1908 was extended to the district in which the property was situate That Act provided that no decree shall be passed for the sale of the right of a raiyat in his holding and that such right shall not be sold in execution of a decree It was held that the preliminary decree did not operate as res judicata and that the Court had no power to pass a final decree for sale [see also ill (2) above] This rule as stated above does not apply to a case where the law has been altered by subsequent judicial decisions (j)

In the cases in which it was held that an erroneous decision on a point of law where the causes of action were different does not operate as res judicata the Courts were influenced by the consideration that they would be perpetuating an injustice for all time if they were to hold that an erroneous decision on a point of law in a former suit was binding upon the parties in a subsequent suit instituted upon a new cause of action It must however be recognized as stated by Mookerjee J in Aghore Nath v Kamini Debi (k) that the effect of this is to substitute in the present section the expression cause of action for the matter in issue In Venkata v Andaiolu (l) Napier J took the extreme view that where a decision on a point of law whether it be on the construction of a document or of a statute or on common law or on customary law once settles a question that arises directly out of conflicting views as to the rights of the parties it is res judicata A similar opinion was expressed by Shah J and Fawcett J in Sitaram v Laxman (m) and by Das J in Ramlal v Deodhari Rai (n) To get over the difficulties which might arise from this extreme view some judges have suggested a distinction between a decision on an abstract question of law such as a question of limitation and a decision on a concrete question such as the construction of a document entered into between the parties to a suit the latter question being treated as one to which the rule of res judicata applies and the former as one to which the principle of stare decisis applies (o) It is difficult to see what the principle of stare decisis has to do with the rule of res judicata (p) In Tarini Charan v Kedar Nath (q) Rankin C. J said that whether a decision was correct or erroneous it had no bearing on the question of res judicata and that what was res judicata between the parties to a suit was not the reasoning or any principle of law but the actual decision declaring the rights of the parties

In this connection it is interesting to note the recent decision of the Privy Council in Broken Hill Proprietary Co v Broken Hill Municipal Council (r) The appeal was from a judgment of the Supreme Court of New South Wales The question for determination was as to the correct method of ascertaining the annual value of a mine for rating purposes for the years 1919 1920 and 1921 That question turned upon the construction of s. 153 (3) of the Local Government Act 1919 of New South Wales The company was assessed for the years 1917 1918 and 1919 by the Council on a particular construction of the section and that construction was upheld by the High Court of Australia The Council adopted the same method for assessment for the years 1919 1920 and 1921 and it was upheld by the Supreme Court The company appealed to the Privy Council. It was contended on behalf of the Council that the question as to the matter of valuation was res judicata but this contention was overruled and the appeal was allowed As to the plea of res judicata their Lordships said There is no substance however in this contention. The decision of the High Court related to a valuation and a liability to a tax in a previous year and no doubt as regards that year the decision could not be disputed The present case relates to a new question—namely the valuation for a different year and the liability for that year It is not eadem questio and therefore the principle of res judicata cannot apply This case shows that according to the English law an erroneous decision on a question at least of the interpretation of a statute does not operate as res judicata If a decision of every question of law were res judicata a decision that one of several co sharers may alone maintain a suit for rent of the entire holding though in contravention of the express provisions of s 194 of the Agra Tenancy Act 1901 would operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties so as to preclude the tenant from raising the same defence in that suit but is has been rightly decided that such a decision has not the effect of res judicata (s)

Estoppel against a statute —Whether or not a finding on a point of law can be res judicata it is a settled principle that there can be no estoppel against a statute for estoppel cannot supersede the law of the land (t) Thus in Woomesh v Barada (u) where a previous rent suit had been decreed at a rate which included illegal cesses the defendant was not precluded from questioning the legality of the claim The Bombay High Court has allowed the plea of res judicata to sanction what is prohibited by law This was in a case (v) where a mortgagor lessee of a portion of a bhag which was inalienable under the Bombay Bhagdari Act 5 of 1862 when sued for rent was not allowed to plead that the bhag was inalienable because he had omitted to do so in a previous ex parte rent suit In a more recent case (w) the Allahabad High Court dismissed a suit by a single co sharer for rent because that form of suit was forbidden by section 194 of the Agra Tenancy Act It was objected that the defendants had not raised this plea in previous rent suits and as to this the Court said that where the law forbids a certain thing being done in a suit no amount of failure by a defendant in previous suits to plead the positive bar created by legislature will prevent its being taken up in a subsequent suit

CONDITION II

The same parties or parties under whom any of them claim

This condition is the principle that judgments and decrees bind only parties and privies (z)* A privy is a convenient term of English Law to describe a person who claims under a party Latham J, in a Bombay case (y) classified persons other than parties as (1) privies (2) persons not claiming under parties but represented by them and (3) strangers A privy who claims under a party is bound for he who takes the advantage must bear the burden—qui sentit commodum debet et sentire onus Persons represented are in fact parties through their representatives—Explanation VI In the absence of fraud an adjudication is binding on the first two classes for as to strangers the maxim applies that res inter alios acta noceri non debet

Same parties—Parties are persons whose names are on the record at the time of the decision and he may be a person who has intervened in the suit (z) A party who withdraws or whose name is struck off ceases to be a party (a) A party who dies during the pendency of the suit but whose name erroneously remains on the record is not a party (b) If the parties are different there is no res judicata (c) Thus A sues B for rent The defence is that C and not A is the landlord A fails to prove his title and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B and C for a declaration of his title to the property The suit is not barred for the parties to the two suits are not the same C not having been a party to the former suit (d)

Res judicata between co defendants—As a matter may be res judicata between a plaintiff and a defendant so it may be res judicata as between co plaintiffs or as between co defendants First as to res judicata between co defendants if in a suit by A against B and C there is a matter directly and substantially in issue between B and C and an adjudication upon that matter is necessary to the determination of the suit the adjudication may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between B and C in which either of them is plaintiff and the other defendant (e) In other words if a plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co defendants the Court will try and decide the case and the co defendants will be bound But if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co defendants the co defendants will not be bound as between each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree which the plaintiff obtains (f) These are the limits within which the doctrine of res judicata should be applied as between co defendants (g) Three conditions to be fulfilled are (1) a conflict of interest between the co defendants (2) the necessity to decide that conflict in order to give the plaintiff appropriate relief and (3) a decision of the question between the co defendants (h)

A Hindu H dies leaving two daughters *D*1 and *D*2 and a nephew N *D*1 sues *D*2 and N to recover certain property under an oral will of H *D*2 claims the property under a will in writing executed by H N claims the property as undivided nephew of H The Court finds that H and N were divided that the will in writing is the valid will and dismisses *D*1 s suit Subsequently *D*2 sues N to recover the property under the written will N contends that he and H were joint and that he became entitled to the property by right of survivorship The question whether H and N were joint is res judicata That question was directly and substantially in issue in the first suit and it was necessary to decide it in that suit to adjudicate upon *D*1 s claim and it was decided against N (i) Another type of cases in which a question between co defendants may become res judicata is where a suit is brought against two or more defendants and a will has to be construed by the Court to adjudicate upon the plaintiff s claim which is founded on the will In such cases the decision with regard to the construction of the will on the rival contentions of the defendants may be res judicata in a sub equent suit by some or one of them against the rest (j) but not if no rival contentions were raised at all (k) A decree for partition is in favour of each party to whom a share is awarded (l) and is res judicata not only as against the plaintiff (m) but as between the co defendants

Res judicata as between co plaintiffs —Next as to res judicata between co plaintiffs As a matter may be res judicata between co defendant so it may be res judicata between co plaintiffs subject to the same conditions which apply to the case of co defendants (n)

Pro forma defendant —A party may be joined as a defendant in a suit merely because his presence is necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon the questions involved see O 1 r 10 (2) and sec 32 of the Code of 1882 In such a ca e no relief is sought against him and the matter in i sue in the suit is not in issue between him and any other party and cannot therefore be res judicata against him For instance A claiming to be entitled to posses ion of a tank as tenant of X sues B for possession Y is joined as pro forma defendant and no relief is claimed against him The suit is dismis ed on a finding that B is the owner Y then sues B for possession and B contends that the issue of ownership is res judicata This contention must fail for the issue was decided in the former suit between A and B and not between Y and B for Y was only a pro forma defendant (o) Another instance is the case of Radha Kishan v Khursid Hossein (p) where a prior mortgagee who was a pro forma defendant in a puisne mortgagee s suit for sale was not barred from subsequently enforcing his own security See the note on this case under O 34 r 1 below

Whether one person is bound because he claims under another is a question of substantive law The following are some instances of cases decided on this point with reference to the rule of res judicata —

(1) A lessee claims under his lessor but a lessor does not claim under his lessee and so the dismissal of the lessees ejectment suit against a trespasser does not bar a similar suit by the lessor (s)

(2) A purchaser at an execution sale acquires the right title and interest of the judgment debtor in the land sold and is bound by a decision between his landlord the decree holder and the judgment debtor as to its area (t) But where mortgaged property is sold in execution of a mortgage decree and it is purchased by the mortgagee a decision between the landlord and the mortgagor as to the rate of rent is not binding on the purchaser (u)

(3) A purchaser at a revenue sale does not claim under the defaulting proprietor and is not bound by a decree against him (v)

(4) A son in a joint and undivided Hindu family does not claim under his father (w) but a son claiming under a custom of primogeniture claims under his father (x)

(5) A remainderman does not claim under the life tenant and a remainderman under a will is not bound by a decree against a widow who has a life estate under the will (y)

The title by which the parties in the subsequent suit claim must have arisen subsequently to the commencement of the former suit —In order that a decision in a suit between A and B may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between A and C it is necessary to show that C claims under B by a title arising subsequently to the commencement of the first suit Thus a purchaser mortgagee lessee or donee of a property is not estopped by a decree obtained in a suit against the vendor mortgagor lessor or donor commenced after the date of the purchase mortgage lease or gift (z)

Representative suit—Explanation VI—This section deals with representative suits that is suits instituted by or against a person in his representative as distinguished from individual character Suits brought or defended by one or more persons on behalf of themselves and others with the leave of the Court under O 1 r 8 are common instances of this class Explanation VI provides that where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a public right or a private right claimed in common for themselves and others all persons interested in such right shall for the purposes of this section be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating It refers to cases in which a decision in a suit may operate as res judicata against persons not expressly named as parties to the suit as where a suit is instituted by A and B on behalf of them elves and others or where it is instituted against A and B on behalf of themselves and others The conditions under which the decision in such a suit may constitute res judicata against the parties not expressly named in the suit are—

(1) that there must be a right claimed by one or more persons in common for themselves and others not expressly named in the suit

(2) that the parties not expressly named in the suit must be interested in such right and

(3) that the litigation must have been conducted bona fide on behalf of all parties interested (a)

Where a person claims a right for himself which happens to be common to him and others he cannot be said to be litigating on behalf of the others and the Explanation does not apply (b)

The right referred to in this Explanation may either be a public right or a private right The words public right have been added into this Explanation in view of the provisions of s 91 below The right to have a public nuisance abated is a public right The right of pasturage claimed by custom by the inhabitants of a village over a tract of land or to take water from a spring or well is a private right (c)

In some of the ca es that arose under the Code of 1882 the opinion was expressed that the present Explanation so far as it relates to private rights must be confined to cases where leave to sue has been obtained under s 30 of that Code [now O 1 r 8 (1)] (d) But the Explanation is not confined to such cases and applies also where no such leave is obtained provided the litigation was carried on bona fide on behalf of all others interested in the right claimed (e) Suits by a Hindu widow or by a manager of a joint Hindu family or by a reversioner in her or his representative character are instances of this class

Shebait karnavan tru tee administrator etc —If the parties in the subsequent suit can be said to have been repre ented by the parties in the former suit the decision in the former suit will bind the parties in the subsequent suit Thus a shebait a trustee of a devasam a karnum a holder of vatan or saranjam lands an administrator of the estate of a deceased person a holder of an inam grant represents each his successor therefore a decree against him will bind his succe sor (f) A decree against the karnavan of a tarwad in his representative capacity binds the members of the tarwad (g) There are certain purposes for which the official assignee represents the insolvent (h) When however the official assignee brings the insolvent s property to sale for the benefit of the creditors he represents the whole body of creditors When a claim to an attached house was dismissed and on the insolvency of the judgment debtor the claimant filed a suit to establish his title to the house as against the official assignee the suit was not barred by res judicata as the official assignee represented not the judgment debtor but the whole body of creditors (i) A benamidar represents the real owner and a decree against the benamidar binds the owner (j)

Joint Hindu family —The question whether the manager of a joint Hindu family represents the other members in a suit affecting the family depends very largely upon the facts of the case If he was acting in the suit in the intere ts of the minor members and with the consent of the adult members they all are bound (k) If the cause of action

Hindu widow and reversioners —A decree passed against a Hindu widow as representing the estate of her husband in respect of a debt or other transaction binding on the estate is binding upon the reversioners (m) unless as was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Shivaganga case it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right in that suit—or in other words unless that decree could have been successfully impeached on some special ground (n) The reason of this qualification is that though a Hindu widow represents the estate of the reversioners for some purposes it is her duty not only to represent the estate but also to protect it (o) The observations of their Lordships in the Shivaganga case were construed in many cases to mean that a decree passed against a Hindu widow or other limited heir did not bind the reversioners unless the decree was passed in a suit contested to the end and that neither a consent decree nor a decree on an award however bona fide the compromise or reference might be bound the reversioners But this view has now been definitely rejected by the Privy Council as it involves very extreme consequences one of them being that a Hindu widow must fight the case up to the Privy Council and another that her opponent can never suggest a compromise because he would know that any compromise would be upset The rule of law as now established is that a widow has power to compromise a suit and a decree passed against her though on a compromise or on an award binds the reversioners as much as a decree in a suit contested to the end provided the compromise was entered into by her bona fide for the benefit of the estate which she represents and not for her personal advantage (p) A decree however against a Hindu widow not in her representative but personal character does not bind the reversioners (q) A decree passed against the legal personal representative of a Hindu widow in respect of her husband s estate does not bind the reversioners for the representative of a widow does not represent the estate of the husband (r)

There is no authority for the proposition that a Hindu widow otherwise qualified to represent an estate in litigation ceases to be so qualified merely owing to a personal disability or disadvantage as a litigant although the merits of a suit by or against her are tried and the trial is fair and honest The mere fact therefore that she is personally estopped from denying the material facts of a case is no ground for withholding the application of the rule enunciated at the commencement of this paragraph namely that where the estate of a deceased Hindu has vested in his widow or other limited heir a decree fairly and properly obtained against her is binding on the reversionary heirs Thus where a Hindu widow instituted a suit for a declaration that an adoption made by her to her deceased husband was invalid and the suit was dismissed on the ground that the widow was estopped by her conduct from denying the validity of the adoption and it was further found upon the facts that the adoption was valid it was held in a suit brought by the reversionary heir after the widow s death for a declaration that the adoption was invalid that the reversionary heir was bound by the decision in the first suit as res judicata (s) The dismissal of a suit brought by a widow on the ground that it was barred by the provisions of s 47 below does not operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent suit by the reversioners (t)

A suit by the next reversioner for a declaration that an alienation made by a Hindu widow is not binding on the reversion is a representative suit on behalf of all the reversioners (u) A decree fairly and properly obtained against the reversioner in such a suit is binding not only upon him but the whole body of reversioners presumptive and contingent on the one hand and the alienee or his representative on the other (v)

Consent decree in a representative suit on behalf of the public —In the under mentioned case (w) the Privy Council left it an open question whether in India persons instituting a suit on behalf of the public can bind the public by a compromise decree

Judgment in rem —As already explained a judgment in a suit is binding only upon the parties to the suit and their privies As a general principle a transaction between two parties in judicial proceedings ought not to be binding upon a third for it would be unjust to bind any person who could not be admitted to make a defence or to examine witnesses or to appeal from a judgment he might think erroneous (x) There are however certain judgments which bind all the world and not only the parties to the proceeding in which they were passed and their privies A judgment that is binding upon the parties and their privies only is called a judgment in personam A judgment which binds all the world is called a judgment in rem Judgments in rem are outside the scope of the present section They are dealt with in the Indian Evidence Act s 41

Decree against minor —A decree passed against a minor properly represented is binding upon him to the same extent as a decree passed against an adult A minor however is entitled to impeach a decree passed against him if the next friend or guardian for the suit was guilty of fraud or gross negligence in allowing the decree to be passed (y) It has been said in one case that any act or omission on the part of the guardian ad litem which in the result has wrought prejudice to the minor s interest is gross negligence ( ) but this indeed is going too far An omission on the part of a guardian ad litem to bring to the notice of the Court a previous judgment between the parties for the purpose of raising the plea of res judicata has been held not to constitute negligence (a)

A decree passed against a minor not properly represented is a nullity and cannot operate as res judicata (b) But it has been held that if a suit is brought on the minor s behalf to set aside a sale in execution of such decree but the plea that the minor was not properly represented in the suit in which the decree was passed is not then taken it cannot be taken in a subsequent suit to set aside the decree and sale by reason of the rule contained in Explanation IV to the section (c)

CONDITION III

Litigating under the same title

Litigating under the same title —The third condition of res judicata is that the parties in the subsequent suit must have litigated under the same title in the former suit The expression same title means the same capacity A verdict against a man suing in one capacity will not stop him when he sues in another distinct capacity and in fact is a different person (d) Thus where a suit is brought by a person to recover possession from a stranger of math property claiming it as the heir of a deceased mohunt but the suit is dismissed on his failure to produce a certificate of succession to establish his heirship the dismissal is no bar to a suit by him as manager of the math on behalf of the math (e) Where the trustees of a public charity fail in a suit to eject a trespasser they are not barred from suing again as members of the public with the consent of the Advocate General (f) The dismissal of a suit by A against B C and D in their individual capacity on a finding that a temple is public property does not operate as res judicata against A in a subsequent suit brought by B C D and others in their representative capacity against A for a declaration that the same temple is public property (g) Similarly the dismissal of a suit brought by a son against his father for maintenance claimed under an agreement is no bar to a suit by him against his eldest brother for a declaration that he is entitled to maintenance out of certain lands in his hands held under a sanad from Government whereby it was alleged the lands were charged at the time of grant with the maintenance of the junior members of the family (h) Where in a suit by A against B for the recovery of a property B sets up a jus tertii in C and the Court finds that C has no title to the property and allows A s claim the finding does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by B after C s death against A claiming the same property as the heir of C as it could not have operated as such against C himself (i)

A mortgagee in possession does not lose the character of mortgagee and become a trespasser because he refuses to deliver up possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor on deposit being made by the latter in Court of the amount payable on the mortgage A executes a usufructuary mortgage of his property to B and places B in possession thereof At the proper time A tenders the mortgage debt Rs 500 to B and asks to be restored to possession B refuses to accept the tender on the ground that more is due to him and to deliver up possession of the property to A A sues B for redemption and deposits Rs 500 in Court The Court finds that the tender was proper and directs B to deliver up possession to A After entering into possession A sues B to recover mesne profits from B from the date of the deposit in Court to the date of the recovery of possession The suit is barred for A might and ought to have claimed the mesne profits in the first suit The suit is between the same parties litigating under the same title that is as mortgagor and mortgagee The mortgage is not extinguished after the tender and desposit and B does not become a trespasser after that date It cannot therefore be said that the suit against B for mesne profits is against him as a trespasser and not as a mortgagee (j)

The words "between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title" cover a case where the later litigant occupies by succession the same position as the former litigant. There may be a succession by the ordinary rules of inheritance or succession by some very special rules as in the case of saranjam estates or vatan estates. The words of the section do not make any distinction between different forms of succession. A decree therefore against a saranjamdar may operate as res judicata against his heir and successor (k) so also a decree against a vatandar (l).

"Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised"

Court of competent jurisdiction —In order that a decision in a former suit may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit it is necessary that the Court which tried the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit. Mere competency to try the issue raised in the subsequent suit is not enough. As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gokul Mandar v Pudmanund (m) "a decree in a previous suit cannot be pleaded as res judicata in a subsequent suit unless the judge by whom it was made had jurisdiction to try and decide not only the particular matter in issue but also the subsequent suit itself in which the issue is subsequently raised." In this respect the enactment goes beyond s 13 of the previous Act 10 of 1877 and also as appears to their Lordships beyond the law laid down by the judges in the Duchess of Kingstone's case (n). The words in s 13 of the Code of 1877 were "No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit between the same parties or between parties under whom etc." Sec 2 of the Code of 1859 was in similar terms. In s 13 of the Code of 1882 the words "Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised" which also occur in the present section were substituted for the words "Court of competent jurisdiction" clearly restricting the operation of the principle of res judicata.

The Court which decided the former suit may be a Court of "exclusive" jurisdiction or a Court of "concurrent" jurisdiction or a Court of "limited" jurisdiction. As to superior Courts nothing is presumed to be out of jurisdiction except what is expressed to be so but with inferior Courts the presumption is to the contrary that nothing is within jurisdiction except what is expressed to be so (o).

Where the Court which decided the former suit is a Court of "exclusive" jurisdiction —If a matter directly and substantially in issue in a former suit has been adjudicated upon by a Court of exclusive jurisdiction the adjudication will bar the trial of the same matter in a subsequent suit. Thus Courts of Revenue have jurisdiction in respect of certain matters to the entire exclusion of civil Courts and the decision of a Revenue Court on such matters cannot be questioned in a civil Court (p). Similarly the Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act gives exclusive jurisdiction to the Court under that Act over a particular class of suits and a decision in a previous suit tried by that Court will be res judicata if the suit falls within the class to which the Act applies (q).

Where the Court which decided the former suit was not a Court of jurisdiction concurrent with that of the Court in which the subsequent suit is brought —In such a case the Court which decided the former suit cannot be a Court competent to try the subsequent suit within the meaning of this section (r)

Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of concurrent jurisdiction —In such a case the Court which decided the former suit might or might not have been competent to try the subsequent suit If it was the decision would operate as res judicata but not otherwise

Summarising the above we may say that in order that a decision in a former suit may operate as res judicata the Court which decided that suit must have been either—

1 a Court of exclusive jurisdiction or

2 a Court of concurrent jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit

The following are the principal rules as to concurrent jurisdiction —

(1) The jurisdiction of the two Courts must be concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit as well as the subject matter —This rule was laid down by Sir Barnes Peacock in Edun v Bechun (s) and it was approved by the Privy Council in Misir v Sheo Baksh (t) The learned Chief Justice said that there were in India many grades of Courts with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction presided over by judges whose qualification differed widely that it would be improper that a finding as to the validity of an adoption or of a will in a petty suit in a Munsiff s Court should be conclusive in a suit for a property of a large amount in a High Court and that by taking concurrent jurisdiction to mean concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit as well as the subject matter this evil or inconvenience is avoided. In Run Bahadur v Lucho Koer (u) the Privy Council said that if this construction of the law were not adopted the lowest Court in India might determine finally and without appeal to the High Court the title to the greatest estate in the Indian empire It is essential therefore that the first Court was a Court competent to try and decide not only the particular matter in issue but also the subsequent suit in which the issue is subsequently raised (v)

First as to pecuniary limit —The jurisdiction of the Court which decided the former suit and that of the Court in which the subsequent suit is brought must be concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit A sues B in Court X to recover interest due on a bond for Rs 12 000 For the defence it is alleged that the amount actually lent by A was Rs 4 000 and that A was not entitled to interest on more than Rs 4 000 The Court finds that the amount actually lent was Rs 4 000 and awards A interest on that sum only Court X is a Court of which the jurisdiction is limited to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 5 000 A then sues B in a High Court to recover the principal sum of Rs 12 000 alleging that that was the actual amount lent by him to B B contends that the actual amount advanced was Rs 4 000 and that the question as to whether Rs 12 000 was lent or Rs 4 000 is res judicata The question is not res judicata for the jurisdiction of Court X being limited to Rs 5 000 it was not a Court competent to try the subsequent suit in which the amount claimed is Rs 12 000 Pecuniary jurisdiction is determined by the plaintiff s estimate of the value of his claim and if the Court awards less that does not shew that the suit was brought in the wrong Court (w) But the plaintiff canno prevent a decision in a previous suit from operating as res judicata by overvaluing th second suit (x) Where A brought two suits in a Provincial Small Cause Cour for compensation in each suit for loss of one parcel and the suits were dismissed and h subsequently brought a suit in the Munsiff s Court joining together the claims in th respect of both the parcels so as to bring the valuation above the Rs 500 limit it wa held that the suit was barred on the principle of res judicata (y)

Secondly as to subject matter—The jurisdiction of the two Courts must b concurrent as regards subject matter Thus certain Courts have no jurisdiction t adjudicate upon questions of title though that question may be gone into incidentally i order to decide the principal question A finding on a question of title by such Court cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit on title This generally happens i the three following cases —

(a) Where the first Court is a Probate Court and the second Court a Civil Court —There are cases in which it has been held that a decision in a proceeding in a Probat Court for a grant of probate or letters of administration as to which of the rival appli cants is the nearest heir of the deceased or as to whether the applicant is the residuary legatee upon a true construction of the will of the deceased and therefore entitled t probate does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by the defeated party for a declaration of his title to the property left by the deceased and for possession thereo so as to preclude him from litigating the same question against the suit ( ) The authority however of these decisions has been considerably shaken by the judgment of t Privy Council in Sheoparsan v Ramnandan (a) and it has been held by the High Courts o Rangoon (b) and Calcutta (c) that a finding in a proceeding for letters of administration that one of two rival applicants is the nearest heir of the deceased is res judicata in a subsequent suit for a declaration of title These decisions proceed on the ground tha where a matter has been decided by a Court having jurisdiction to decide it the decision operates as res judicata though the Courts may not be the same It has similarly been that if A alleging himself to be the executor of B s will applies for probate of th will and C B s widow opposes the application and probate is refused on the groun that the will is not proved A will be preclud d in a subsequent suit by C against him to recover her husband s property from him from contending that he is executor an entitled as such to retain possession of the property Though the judgment of the Probat Court refusing probate to A does not operate in such a case as a judgment in rem i operates as res judicata between A and C under s 295 of the Indian Succession Act 1925 read with s 11 of the Code (d) Similarly a decision of the Probate Court tha the testator executed his will as a free agent and not under undue influence precludes the party against whom the decision is given from attacking the will on this ground in a suit in a civil Court (e) As to s 387 of the Indian Succession Act 1851 see the under mentioned case (f) See also the Indian Evidence Act 18 2 s 41

(b) Where the first Court is a Munsiff's Court and the second Court a District Court —A sues B for rent in a Munsiff s Court The defence is that C and not A is the landlord The Court finds that A is not the landlord and the suit is dismissed A then sues B in a District Court for a declaration of title to the land The suit is not barred for a Munsiff s Court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title (g)

Similarly a decision in a suit for damages instituted in a Provincial Small Cause Court [a Court not competent to try a suit on title] does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for establishment of title (h) A decision in a suit for rent in a Pro vincial Small Cause Court [a Court not competent to try a suit for possession] does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for possession (i)

(c) Where the first Court is a Revenue Court and the second Court is a Civil Court —A decision of a Revenue Court on a question of title is no bar to the trial of the same question by the ordinary Civil Courts unless the Revenue Court is empowered by the Legislature to determine questions of title so as to constitute it pro tanto a Civil Court (j) The reason is that Courts of Revenue are generally Courts of jurisdic tion limited to adjudicate upon questions of rent tenure etc (k) There are however some matters of which the decision by a Revenue Court is expressly declared by the Act constituting the Court to have the force of a decree in a civil suit (l) and some as to which it is declared that the decision shall be final (m) In such cases the decision of a Revenue Court will operate as res judicata so as to bar the trial of the same matter in a Civil Court In a recent case (n) an occupancy tenant sued in a Revenue Court to evict the defendant alleging that he was a sub tenant The suit was dismissed on the ground that the defendant was not a sub tenant but probably a sharer in the occupancy The plaintiff then sued in the Civil Court to eject the defendant as a trespasser but the suit was dismissed on the ground that its object was to reverse the decision of the Revenue Court This decision it is submitted is incorrect The finding of the Revenue Court that the defendant was not a sub tenant was final But it had no such jurisdiction to declare who were sharers in the occupancy and in any event its finding on that point was only incidental See notes Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of exclusive jurisdiction on p 64 above For other cases see foot note (o) See note Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of exclusive juris diction on p 63 above

(2) When the first Court is a Criminal Court and the second Court is a Civil Court —Criminal proceedings are not a suit hence no finding of a Criminal Court can be res judicata in a subsequent suit It has thus been held that a conviction or an acquittal in a criminal case is not conclusive in a civil suit for damages in respect of the act charged against the accused (p) On this principle the finding of a Criminal Court that A assaulted or abducted B is not res judicata in a suit for damages against A for assault or abduction (q) nor is an acquittal a bar to a civil suit against the accused (r)

The High Court of Bombay has held that the judgment of a Civil Court may in a proper case be admissible in evidence in a criminal proceeding between the same parties Thus where A charged B with criminal breach of trust in respect of certain items and it appeared that all those items had been dealt with by the Civil Court and the contentions of the accused with reference to all of them had been found to be correct by that Court it was held that the judgment of the Civil Court was admissible in evidence in the criminal proceedings against the accused (s)

(3) To determine whether the Court which decided the former suit had jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit regard must be had to the jurisdiction of that Court at the date of the former suit and not to its jurisdiction at the date of the subsequent suit (t) —The words Court competent to try such subsequent suit refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the first suit was brought If at that time such Court would have been competent to try the subsequent suit had it been then brought the decision of such Court would operate as res judicata although on a subsequent date by a rise in the value of the property that Court had ceased to be a proper Court so far as regards its pecuniary jurisdiction to take cognizance of a suit relating to that very property The leading case on the subject is Gopi Nath v Bhuguat (u) In that case a suit was brought in the year 1860 to recover certain property of which the value at that time was less than Rs 1 000 and therefore the proper Court to try it was that of the Munsiff A second suit was afterwards brought in the year 1880 between the same parties in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to recover the same property which had then risen in value and become worth more than Rs 1 000 The matter directly and substantially in issue in both the suits was the same and the question arose whether the decision of the Munsiff in the first suit operated as res judicata in the second suit It was contended that as the Munsiff could not have tried the second suit in consequence of the value of the property being more than Rs 1 000 his decision could not have the effect of res judicata But it was held that the decision operated as res judicata for if the second suit was instituted in the year 1860 that is at the time when the first suit was brought the Munsiff s Court would have been competent to try it Mitter J said The reasonable construction of the words in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit seems to us to be that it must refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the first suit was brought that is to say if the Court which tried the first suit was competent to try the subsequent suit if then brought the decision of such Court would be conclusive under s 13 [of the Code of 1882] although on a subsequent date by a rise in the value of such property or from any other cause the said Court ceased to be a proper Court so far as pecuniary jurisdiction is concerned to take cognizance of a suit relating to that property The same view has been taken by the High Court of Madras (v) It has however been held by that Court that the augmentation of a pecuniary claim by accrual of interest is not similar to a rise in the market value of a property and that though in the latter case the decision in the prior suit may operate as res judicata it cannot in the former case (w)

But it will operate as res judicata if the claim for interest is not bona fide and is clearly untenable (x)

(4) It is the competency of the original Court which decided the former suit that must be looked to and not that of the appellate Court in which that suit was ultimately decided on appeal (y) or of the executing Court (z) —A suit is instituted in a Munsiff s Court An appeal from the decree in that suit is preferred to a District Court A subsequent suit relating to the same matter in issue is brought also in a District Court The decision in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit for though the District Court that heard the appeal may have jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit the Munsiff s Court that is the Court which decided the former suit is not a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subse quent suit

Though an appeal lies from a decision of a Talukdari Settlement Officer to the District Court yet the decision operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit in the District Court for a Settlement Officer is not a Court competent to try a civil suit he is merely an administrative officer (a)

(5) A Court does not cease to be a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit if its inability to entertain it arises not from incompetence but from the existence of another Court with a preferential jurisdiction (b) —Thus a finding by a Munsiff in a suit for possession under s 9 of the Specific Relief Act 1877 instituted in his Court that the plaintiff was wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant is res judicata on the issue as to wrongful dispossession in a subsequent suit brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant for damages for wrongful dispossession in a Court of Small Causes

(6) A decision on a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit tried by a Revenue Court may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought in the same Court though the character of the suits may be such that in the one case an appeal lies to the Commissioner and in the other to a District Court —The fact that in the two suits appeals lie to different Courts does not affect the application of the rule of res judicata (c)

Explanation II —This explanation is new Under the Code of 1882 the High Courts of Bombay (d) and Madras (e) held that a decision in a suit in which no second appeal was allowed by law such as suits of a nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes when the amount or value of the subject matter does not exceed five hundred rupees could not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit in which such appeal was allowed The High Court of Calcutta dissented holding that that a decision in a suit could operate as res judicata notwithstanding that no second appeal was allowed by law in that suit (f) Explanation II affirms the view taken by the High Court of Calcutta that the competence of a Court does not depend on the right of appeal from the decision of such Court (g)

Judgment of Court not competent to deliver it—A judgment delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it cannot operate as res judicata [Evidence Act 1872 s 44] For this purpose there is no distinction so far as Chartered High Courts are concerned between cases where a Court has no jurisdiction at all to try a suit and cases where it cannot exercise jurisdiction unless leave to sue has been obtained under cl 12 of the Charter Therefore a judgment delivered by a Chartered High Court in a suit which it has no jurisdiction to try unless leave to sue has been obtained cannot operate as res judicata if leave to sue was not obtained (h)

Judgment obtained by fraud or collusion—A judgment obtained by fraud or collusion (i) cannot operate as res judicata [Evidence Act 1872 s 44] Fraud is an extrinsic collateral act which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of Justice Lord Coke says it avoids all judicial acts ecclesiastical or temporal (j) Where a decree is impeached on the ground of fraud the fraud alleged must be actual positive fraud a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case and the obtaining of the decree by that contrivance The mere fact that a decree has been obtained by perjured and false evidence is no ground for setting it aside on the ground of fraud (k)

CONDITION V

The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must have been "heard and finally decided" by the Court in the former suit

Heard and finally decided— Res judicata by its very words means a matter on which the Court has exercised its judicial mind and has after argument and consideration come to a decision on a contested matter (l) The section requires that there should be a final decision (m) The mere fact that a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit is not sufficient to constitute the matter res judicata it is also essential that it should have been heard and finally decided This does not mean that there should be an actual finding on the issue in question it is sufficient if the decree necessarily involves a finding of the issue (n) It has thus been held that an issue may be res judicata if the judgment of the appellate Court shows that the issue was treated as material and was decided although the decree passed merely affirms the decree of the lower Court which did not deal with the issue (o)

In dealing with questions under the present head it is important to note—

(1) that if a decree is specific and is at variance with a statement in the judgment regard must be had to the decree and not to the statement in the judgment (p)

A matter will be said to have been heard and finally decided notwithstanding that the former suit was disposed of in any of the following ways —

(i) ex parte (s) or

(ii) by dismissal under O 17 r 3 (t) or

(iii) by a decree on an award (u) or

(iv) by oath tendered under s 8 of the Indian Oaths Act 1873 (v)

(v) by dismissal owing to plaintiff s failure to adduce evidence at the hearing (w)

(ii) for default of plaintiff s appearance under O 9 r 8 (y) [but a fresh suit on the same cause of action may be barred under O 9 r 9] or

(iii) on the ground of non joinder of parties ( ) or misjoinder of parties (a) or multifariousness (b) or on the ground that the suit was badly framed (c) or on the ground of a technical mistake (d) or

(iv) for failure on the part of the plaintiff to produce probate or letters of administration or succession certificate when the same is required by law to entitle the plaintiff to a decree (e) or

See notes Liberty to bring a fresh suit on p 75 below

The decision in the former suit must have been necessary to the determination of that suit—A matter directly and substantially in issue cannot be said to have been heard and finally decided unless the finding on the issue was necessary to the determination of the suit A finding on an issue cannot be said to be necessary to the decision of a suit unless the decision was based upon that finding And a decision cannot be said to have been based upon a finding unless an appeal can lie against that finding The reason is that everything that should have the authority of res judicata is and ought to be subject to appeal and reciprocally an appeal is not admissible on any point not having the authority of res judicata (l) It was at one time thought that the test of res judicata was whether the finding was embodied in the decree This however is not so for res judicata is a matter of substance and not of form It is the right of appeal which indicates whether a finding was incidental or necessary This leads to the following rules —

RULE I—If the plaintiff s suit is wholly dismissed no issue decided against the defendant can operate as res judicata against him in a subsequent suit for the defendant cannot appeal from a finding on any such issue the decree being wholly in his favour (m) [see ills. (1) and (3)] But every issue decided against the plaintiff may operate as res judicata against him in a subsequent suit for the plaintiff can appeal from a finding on such issue the decree being against him (n) [see ill (3)] With reference to the first branch of this rule it is well settled that when a plaintiff s suit is dismissed in spite of a finding on an issue in his favour that finding does not operate as res judicata against the defendant (o) With reference to the second branch of this rule the Allahabad High Court has expressed the opinion that it does not apply to a case where the Court after finding against the plaintiff on an issue which should in logical sequence have been decided first proceeds to record its findings against the plaintiff on other issues in such a case according to that Court the findings on the other issues do not operate as res judicata against the plaintiff in a subsequent suit (p) [See notes to s 96 Who may appeal]

Finality' of decree in redemption suits—If the mortgagor files a suit for redemption and no order for foreclosure extinguishing the right of redemption in default of payment is made the preliminary decree for redemption does not have that effect The right of redemption continues until a decree absolute for foreclosure is passed ( ) or the sale is confirmed (u) In such a case there is a conflict of decisions as to whether the mortgagor can enforce his right of redemption by a second suit after a preliminary decree on which no further proceedings have been taken According to Allahabad Bombay and Lahore decisions he can (v) on the other hand according to Calcutta and Madras decisions he cannot (w) But though according to the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts a second suit for redemption is not barred the same High Courts have held that any matter decided in the earlier suit e g the amount of the mortgage debt cannot be re opened in the subsequent suit (x)

In the converse case of the mortgagee not taking further proceedings on his decree for sale there is also a conflict of decision as to whether the mortgagor if he does not redeem under the decree may file a redemption suit The Bombay High Court says that he can (y) but the Madras High Court holds that he is barred by this section ( )

Where a decree is appealed from it is the appellate decree that must be looked to to determine the question of res judicata and not the decree appealed from—A decision liable to appeal may be final within the meaning of this section until the appeal is preferred But once the appeal is filed the decision lose its character of finality and what was once res judicata again becomes res sub judice that is matter under judicial inquiry The appeal destroys the finality of the decision the decree of the lower Court is superseded by the decree of the appellate Court and it is the latter decree that should be looked to to determine the question of res judicata (a)

A sues B for damages for cutting and removing trees from his land The suit is dismissed on the grounds (1) that the land did not belong to A and (2) that B did not cut the trees A appeals from the decree on both these grounds but the appeal is dismissed on the ground that A had failed to prove that B had cut the trees Note that the appellate Court does not decide the question of A s title A then sues B for possession of the land claiming that the land belongs to him B contends that the suit is barred as res judicata as the first Court had found in the former suit that the land did not belong to A The suit is not barred for the question of A s title became res sub judice when the appeal was preferred and it did not become res judicata as the appellate Court did not adjudicate upon that question But a judgment of an appellate Court will operate as res judicata as regards all findings of the lower Court which though not referred to in it are adopted by a decree which grants a relief that is possi ble only on such findings (b) An issue again is res judicata where the judgment of the appellate Court shows that the issue was treated as material and was decided although the decree passed merely affirms the decree of the lower Court which did not deal with the issue (c)

The Rangoon High Court has held that a decree may be final as regards a party A who has not appealed although another party B has appealed if A has not been made a party by B in his appeal. The mere possibility that the Appellate Court might make A a party and proceed under O 41 r 33 does not make it less final (d)

Consent decree and estoppel—The present section does not apply in terms to consent decrees for it cannot be said in the case of such decrees that the matters in issue between the parties have been heard and finally decided within the meaning of this section (e) A consent decree however has to all intents and purpose the same effect as res judicata as a decree passed in invitum (f) It raises an estoppel as much as a decree passed in invitum (g) So long therefore as a consent decree stands it is not open to either party thereto to give it the go by even if it contains clauses that are bad in law (h) A consent de ree however is a mere creature of the agreement on which it is founded and it may be et aside on any ground which would invalidate an agreement between the parties (i) But unless all the parties agree an application cannot be made to the Court of first instance in the original suit to set aside the decree (j) though it may be done in the case of an interlocutory order (k) See notes to s 96 Procedure for setting aside consent decree

Thus where in a suit by a mortgagee (1) for a money decree and (2) in default of payment for sale of the mortgaged property the mortgagee was content to take a money decree only it was held that a subsequent suit by him on failure of the mortgagor to satisfy the decree to have the amount of the mortgage debt paid to him by the sale of the property was barred as res judicata The relief as to sale having been claimed by the mortgagee but not having been expressly granted in the former suit, must be deemed to have been refused so as to bar the subsequent suit (l)

Liberty to bring a fresh suit —Where a former suit between the same parties in the same Court and for the same relief results in a decree of dismissal but the judgment leaves it open to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit and leaves open untouched and undecided all matters affecting the rights of the parties the decree does not constitute res judicata as such matters cannot be said to have been heard and finally decided within the meaning of this section (m) But if the Court has in the particular circumstances of a case no power to reserve liberty to a party to bring a fresh suit, the subsequent suit may be barred as res judicata notwithstanding the liberty to bring a fresh suit Thus in Watson v Collector of Rajshahye (n) the former suit was dismissed for the plaintiff s failure to produce evidence but a direction was given that the plaintiff could institute a fresh proceeding as if no suit had been brought Nevertheless the Privy Council held that the subsequent suit was barred by res judicata for the reservation was of no effect Again Fateh Singh v Jagannath Baksh (o) recently decided by the Judicial Committee is a case directly on this point In that case the plaintiffs brought a suit to set aside a gift made by a Hindu widow out of her husband s estate they alleged that they were presumptive heirs. The widow died pending the suit After her death the plaintiffs applied to amend the plaint by setting up a family custom of inheritance Upon that application failing and the plaintiffs admitting that apart from the alleged custom they could not succeed the trial Court dismissed the suit but gave them liberty to file a fresh suit for possession Subsequently the plaintiffs brought another suit to recover from parties to the former suit a share in the property basing their claim upon family custom It was held that the suit was barred by res judicata since the custom was a matter which might and ought to have been set up in the former suit and further that the trial Court having dismissed the suit it had no power under O 23 r 1 (1) to give liberty to bring a fresh suit

When Explanation V applies —Explanation V does not apply unless the relief claimed was (1) substantial relief and (2) it was such as it is obligatory on a Court to grant. We proceed to consider these conditions in order

1 The relief claimed must have been substantial and not merely auxiliary —A sues B (1) to recover her share in the estate of D claiming the same as D s widow and (2) for a declaration that she was lawfully married to D a fact which B had denied. A decree is made by consent awarding Rs 55 000 to A in full satisfaction of her claim against the estate of D The decree does not contain any declaration as to A s marriage with D This circumstance will not bar a subsequent suit by A as D s widow against B to recover her share in the estate of a deceased relative for the relief claimed in the former suit in respect of the legality of marriage was not claimed as a specific or substantial relief It was auxiliary to the principal relief in respect of her share in the estate of D (p)

(?) The relief claimed must have been one which the Court is bound to grant and not one which it is discretionary with the Court to grant—Cases under this head relate principally to mesne profits It was enacted by sec 244 of the Code of 1882 that nothing in this section shall be deemed to bar a separate suit for mesne profits accruing between the institution of the first suit and the execution of the decree therein where such profits are not dealt with by such decree That clause has been omitted in the present Code and under O 20 r 12 mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit are to be ascertained and provided for in the final decree

A sues B for possession and for mesne profits both prior and subsequent to the suit A decree is passed in A s favour for possession. The decree is silent as to mesne profits

In the case put above there is no doubt as to mesne profits prior to the date of the suit that the plaintiff having claimed a relief in respect thereof and the relief not having been granted by the decree the matter is res judicata and A cannot institute a fresh suit for such profits (q)

As to mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit it was held in cases under the Code of 1882 that it being discretionary with the Court to grant such relief the fact of the decree being silent as to such mesne profits did not operate as a bar to a fresh suit (r) In cases under the present Code it has been held by the High Courts of Madras (s) and Allahabad (t) that where in a suit for possession and for past and future mesne profits the Court gives a decree for mesne profits up to the date of the suit and says nothing about subsequent mesne profits a fresh suit to recover subsequent mesne profits is not barred under the present Code any more than under the Code of 1882 In the Madras case Wallis C J said The word relief in the Explanation means relief arising out of a cause of action which had accrued at the date of the suit and on which the suit was brought and did not include relief such as mesne profits accruing after the date of suit as to which no cause of action had then arisen but which the Court was nevertheless expressly empowered to grant The Explanation having been reproduced in exactly the same words the presumption is that it was intended to have precisely the same effect I do not find any sufficient indication to rebut this presumption in the fact that sections 211 and 212 of the old Code were amalgamated to form Order XX rule 12 The change introduced by the new rule is that the award of mesne profits in all cases is to be by preliminary decree and that when ascertained they are to be embodied in a final decree whereas under sections 211 and 212 they were to be ascertained in execution This change does not appear to me to affect the construction of Explanation V to section 11 nor do I think is affected by the omission in section 47 of the new Code of the proviso to the corresponding section 244 of the old Code On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Bombay (u) that where a decree is silent as to future mesne profits claimed in a suit a fresh suit for such mesne profits is barred under Explanation V to this section the reason given being that the omission of the clause which appeared in section 244 of the old Code indicated that a separate suit should not be allowed for such mesne profits

Where a plaint in a mortgage suit contains a prayer for a personal decree but the preliminary decree is silent about it the plaintiff is not precluded from applying for a personal decree under O 34 r 6 for the balance of the mortgage claim after the sale of the mortgaged property as such a decree could not properly be passed until after sale (v)

Section not exhaustive—The section is not exhaustive of the circumstances in which an issue may be res judicata (w) The plea of res judicata rests on the principle that there should be finality in litigation and the plea still remains apart from the limited provisions of the Code (x) In Ram Kirpal v Rup Kuari (y) the Privy Council referred to the binding effect of an interlocutory judgment even in execution proceedings as depending not on the section of the Code but on general principles of law That decision is an authority for the proposition that an issue may be res judicata though it may not have been decided in a former suit It has accordingly been held by the Privy Council that a decision on a dispute between rival claimants as to compensation deposited in Court under sec 31 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894 operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties Their Lordships said It has been suggested that the decision was not in a former suit but whether this were so or not makes no difference for it has recently been pointed out by the Board in Hook v Administrator General of Bengal ( ) that the principle which prevents the same case being twice litigated is of general application and is not limited by the specific words of the Code in this respect (a) A decision in an administration suit whether a gift once was valid may be res judicata in a subsequent proceeding in the same suit (b) An order passed after a contentious proceeding for probate of a will may be res judicata between the parties (c) A decision on a question of relationship in a proceeding on an application for letters of administration after trial of the issue is binding as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties (d) Again the expression former suit does not exclude the application of the rule when suits are tried together nor to interlocutory orders in the same suit or orders in execution proceedings The application of the rule to suits tried together has been discussed on pp 36 37 above

Orders in execution proceedings—The leading case on the application of res judicata to interlocutory orders and to execution proceedings is Ram Kirpal v Rup Kuari (e) decided by the Judicial Committee in 1883 The principle of that decision is that s 11 is not exhaustive and that the principle of res judicata still remains apart from the limited provisions of the Code Prior to that decision the Courts in India generally held that sec 13 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding with the present section) was not applicable to execution proceedings The Judicial Committee held that though the section in terms did not apply to execution proceedings the principle of res judicata applied to such proceedings The question in that case was whether a decision in the course of execution proceedings that the decree according to its true construction awarded future mesne profits operated as res judicata so as to preclude the Court from trying the question over again at a subsequent stage of the proceedings The High Court of Allahabad held that it did not Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it did Their Lordships said —

The matter decided by Mr Probyn was not decided in a former suit but in a proceeding of which the application in which the orders reversed by the High Court were made was merely a continuation It was as binding between the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in a suit is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit or as a final judgment in a suit is binding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution The binding force of such a judgment depends not upon sec 13 Act X of 1877 [s 11 of the present Code] but upon general principles of law If it were not binding there would be no end to litigation The parties were bound by the decision of Mr Probyn who whether right or wrong had decided that it did [that is that the decree awarded future mesne profits] a decision which not having been appealed was final and binding upon the parties and those claiming under them

The ratio decidendi of Ram Kirpal s case is that if a particular construction is put on a decree in proceedings on a former application for execution it is not competent to the Court to treat that construction as erroneous and put another construction on it at a subsequent stage of the execution proceedings (f) Parties cannot raise a second time in the same suit or execution proceeding an issue that has already been determined (g) Thus the Judicial Committee held in Mungul Pershad v Grija Kant (h) that a decision on an application for execution after hearing both the parties that the application is not barred by the law of limitation though erroneous is binding on the parties in subsequent proceedings in execution Their Lordships said The order was made by a Court having competent jurisdiction to try and determine whether the decree was barred by limitation No appeal was preferred against it Admitting for the sake of argument but only for the sake of argument that the decree was barred when the application was made still his order though erroneous was valid not having been reversed. Similarly a decision that an application for execution is barred by limitation though erroneous is conclusive between the parties and the question cannot be re tried on a subsequent application for execution (i)

The principle laid down in Ram Kirpal s case referred to above is that when a question has been raised in an execution proceeding and decided the decision even if erroneous is binding on the parties and the same question cannot be re tried in a subsequent proceeding in execution in other words that the principle of res judicata is applicable to proceedings in execution This principle has been followed by the High Courts of India (j) But this principle does not apply unless the parties to the subsequent proceeding were also parties to the former proceeding (k) and had litigated under the same title (l) Nor does it apply unless the former application was heard and decided Hence an order dismissing an application for execution for default of appearance (m) or allowing it to be struck off for the present (n) or allowing it to be withdrawn with liberty to present a fresh application (o) is no bar to a fresh application for execution Similarly where an application for execution under O 21 r 32 is dismissed on the ground that the decree holder had not given the judgment debtor an opportunity of obeying it a second application for execution after such opportunity had been given is not barred as res judicata (p) Further the decision in the former application must have been necessary for the determination of the application Thus if A applies for execution and B pleads limitation and neither party appearing on the date fixed for the hearing of the objection A s application is dismissed and B s objection is disallowed B is not precluded from raising the plea of limitation on a fresh application for execution made by A the reason being that A s application being dismissed for default it was not necessary for the Court to decide the question of limitation (q)

Where a decree holder applies for execution and the judgment debtor being entitled and having an opportunity to raise a plea in bar of execution e g a plea of limitation fails to do so and an order is made on the application the principle of Explanation IV applies and the judgment debtor is precluded from raising that plea at a subsequent stage in the execution proceedings (r) Thus where A applies for execution of a decree against B and an order is made directing execution to issue B cannot in a subsequent application for execution raise the plea that the first application for execution was barred by limitation (s) In one case the Allahabad Court held that the principle of Explanation IV does not apply to a case where a judgment debtor omits to object to the amount erroneously set forth in the application for execution and that he is entitled to raise the objection at a later stage of the execution proceedings (t) This decision however may be supported on the ground that the Court had inherent power to rectify the error The undermentioned cases (u) contain observations to the effect that Explanation IV should not be extended to execution proceedings and that an order made in execution proceedings should not have the force of res judicata unless the point raised in the subsequent proceedings was actually raised in the former proceedings and decided But these observations are obiter And so are the observations in a Madras case that Explanation V does not apply to proceedings in execution (v)

Ex parte orders —An ex parte order in execution proceedings passed after issue of notice and after the Court is satisfied that the notice was served is on general principles binding as res judicata (w) But the order will not have the force of res judicata unless the notice clearly specifies the nature of the claim (x)

Consent orders —An order made by consent of parties in an execution proceeding is as binding on the parties as an order after a contentious trial (y)

application is heard and finally decided it will debar a subsequent application for the same purpose upon general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata (z)

Application for review—Where an application is made for a review of judgment and the application is refused it does not operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent suit for the same relief and on the same grounds as those put forward in the application for review Neither s 11 nor any doctrine of constructive res judicata can rightly be applied to such a case (a)

Waiver of plea of res judicata—The plea of res judicata is not one which affects the jurisdiction of the Court It is a plea in bar which a party may waive If a party does not raise the plea of res judicata it will be deemed to be a matter directly and substantially issue and decided against him (b)

Conflicting decrees—Where there are two or more conflicting decrees the last decree alone is the effective decree and it is this decree and not any other which can operate as res judicata (c)

Income tax proceedings—A decision of the Commissioner under s 33 of the Income tax Act 1922 in respect of the assessment for a particular year does not operate as res judicata so as to prevent that decision from being re opened in assessments for subsequent years (d)

Bar to further suit

12 [New] Where a plaintiff is precluded by rules from instituting a further suit in respect of any particular cause of action, he shall not be entitled to institute a suit in respect of such cause of action in any Court to which this Code applies

Rules precluding institution of a further suit in respect of the same cause of action—This section is new and is necessitated by the transfer of certain of the provisions of the Code of 1882 to Rules The following is a list of the Rules that bar a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action—

O 2 r 2—Omission to sue in respect of part of a claim

O 9 r 9—Decree against plaintiff by default bars a fresh suit

O 22 r 9—Abatement of suit bars a fresh suit

O 23 r 1—Withdrawal of suit without leave of Court bars a fresh suit

Alterations in the section —Clause (a) is new The last clause of sec. 14 of the Act of 1882 has been omitted as to which see note below How a foreign judgment may be enforced in British India Other alterations are verbal

Foreign Judgment —The expression foreign judgment is defined in s. 2 as meaning the judgment of a foreign Court that is a Court situate beyond the limits of British India which has no authority in British India and is not established or continued by the Governor General in Council The present section provides that a foreign judgment may operate as res judicata except in the six cases specified in the [illegible] and of course in order to so operate the other conditions of sec 11 must be fulfilled [illegible] The foreign Court must be competent to try the suit not only as regards [illegible] limits of its jurisdiction and the subject matter of the suit but also with reference [illegible] its territorial jurisdiction So a decision of a Kattiawar Court as to custom [illegible] partition will not be res judicata in a suit for partition between the same parties [illegible] in British territory (f) In matters of foreign judgments the Courts here are [illegible] by very much the same principles as those adopted by the Courts of England [illegible] act of State is not a judgment and it cannot therefore have the effect of [illegible] Thus it has been held that an order of the Political Agent of Meywar and the [illegible] of Udepore deposing a high priest from his gadi is not a foreign judgment [illegible] an act of State and it cannot therefore operate as res judicata (h)

How a foreign judgment may be enforced in British India.—[illegible] ment of a Court of British India can only be enforced by proceedings in execution [illegible] foreign judgment however may be enforced by proceedings in execution in [illegible] fied cases only (s 44) In other cases a foreign judgment can only be [illegible] suit upon the judgment That is to say if A has obtained a decree against B [illegible] Rs 5 000 in a French Court at Pondicherry and if B has got no property [illegible] to satisfy the decree but has got property in Bombay A may bring a [illegible] in Bombay to recover the amount of the judgment The suit must be [illegible] six years from the date of the judgment (i) and if a decree is passed in [illegible] may proceed to execute it by attachment and sale of B s property in [illegible] on s 44

It was at one time doubtful whether a suit could be maintained in [illegible] the judgment of a Court of a Native State in India or whether the plaint [illegible] upon the original cause of action The Madras High Court held that a [illegible] maintained on the judgment (j) The Bombay High Court held that [illegible]

maintainable(k) and that the only remedy was by way of suit on the original cause of action The general rule is that a Court which entertains a suit on a foreign judgment cannot institute an inquiry into the merits of the original claim or the propriety of the decision (l) The Bombay High Court was apprehensive that a suit on the judgment of a Native State Court might lead to miscarriage of justice as judicial inquiries in Native States are not ordinarily conducted with intelligence and integrity To enforce the view of the Madras High Court and to remove the apprehensions expressed in the Bombay judgments a clause was added to sec 14 of the Code of 1882 by sec 5 of Act 7 of 1888 to make it clear on the one hand that a suit was maintainable on the judgment of a Court of a Native State or any other Court in Asia or Africa (m) and on the other hand to provide that in such a suit the British Indian Court should not be precluded from inquiry into the merits of the case (n) The clause has now been omitted as the reason for the distinction between Courts of Asia and Africa and Courts of other countries has disappeared especially in the case of Japan. The result is that a suit will lie upon a foreign judgment of any Court in Asia or Africa and such a suit now stands upon the same footing as a suit brought on the judgment of a foreign Court in Europe or America

Though a foreign judgment may be enforced by a suit in British India it is not to be supposed that British Indian Courts are bound in all cases to take cognizance of the suit and they may refuse to entertain it on grounds of expediency (o)

Operation of the section —The operation of the section may be illustrated by the following cases —

(a) A sues B in a foreign Court If the suit is dismissed the decision will operate as a bar to a fresh suit by A in British India on the original cause of action unless the decision is inoperative by reason of one or more of the circumstances specified in the section (p) If a decree is passed in favour of A in the foreign Court and A sues B on the judgment in British India B will be precluded from putting in issue the same matters that were directly and substantially in issue in the suit in the foreign Court unless the decision of the foreign Court is inoperative on any one of the six grounds specified in the section.

(b) A obtained a decree against B in the Cochin Court and applied for execution of the decree in the High Court of Bombay [Decrees of the Cochin Court may be executed in British India under s. 44] It was proved that A obtained the decree at Cochin by concealment of essential facts and by fraud [see cl (e) of the section] It was held that execution of the decree should be refused (q)

A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment pronounced by a Court without jurisdiction —The leading case on the subject is Gurdyal v Raja of Faridkot (r) In that case A sued B in the Court of the Native State of Faridkot claiming Rs. 60 000 alleged to have been misappropriated by B while in A s service at Faridkot B did not appear at the hearing and an ex parte decree was passed against him B was a native of another Native State Jhind. In 1869 he left Jhind and went to Faridkot to take up service under A In 1874 he left A s service and returned to Jhind. The suit was brought against him in 1879 At the date of the suit B neither resided in Faridkot nor was he a domiciled subject of the Faridkot State nor did he owe allegiance to that State On these facts the Faridkot State had on general principles of International Law no jurisdiction to entertain the suit against B in respect of the claim which it should be noted was a mere personal claim as distinguished from a claim relating to land or movables (s) The decree of the Faridkot Court was therefore an absolute nullity A then sued B in a British Indian Court on the judgment of the Faridkot Court The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that the Faridkot Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit This decision was upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council The mere fact that the alleged embezzlement took place at Faridkot was not sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Faridkot Court The result would be the same if the suit were for damages for breach of a contract entered into by B with A at Faridkot (t) In other words a foreign Court cannot assume jurisdiction in cases where the claim is a personal one merely because the cause of action arose within its jurisdiction. But if B was residing at Faridkot at the date of the suit the Faridkot Court would have had complete jurisdiction In the case of personal claims it is residence alone that gives jurisdiction in a suit against a foreigner (u) The same rule applies where the country in which the judgment was passed and that in which it is sought to be enforced have separate and distinct systems of administration and judicature though owing allegiance to the same Sovereign Thus a decree passed by the Ceylon Court [which is a foreign Court within the meaning of s 2] in a suit on a contract against a native of British India who was not at the time of the action residing in Ceylon is a nullity and it cannot be enforced by a suit in a Court of British India (v)

Suppose that in the above case the Faridkot Legislature had passed an Act empowering the Courts of Faridkot to entertain suits in cases where the cause of action had arisen in Faridkot though the defendant was a foreigner neither residing in Faridkot nor owing any allegiance or obedience to the Faridkot State Could effect be then given to the judgment of the Faridkot Court in a suit brought upon the judgment in a Court in British India? It could not—for jurisdiction conferred against the general principles of international law is not recognized and no one State can by its legislation confer jurisdiction upon its Court to entertain a suit in respect of a personal claim against foreigners who at the date of the suit were neither resident in that State nor owed any allegiance or obedience to that State (w) But British Indian subjects owe allegiance to the Sovereign of Great Britain and the British Parliament may therefore by legislation confer jurisdiction upon the Courts of England as it has in fact done against British Indian subjects in British India (x) Hence a judgment passed by the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice of England (a foreign Court) against a British Indian subject residing in British India in an action founded on a breach of a contract committed within the jurisdiction of that Court is not a nullity and a suit may be brought on the judgment in British India (y)

In the case of the Raja of Faridkot the decree passed against the defendant by the foreign Court was an ex parte decree that is to say the defendant did not appear before the foreign Court and the decree was passed in his absence But what if the defendant had appeared and defended the suit in the foreign Court? This question is considered in the following paragraph

Submission to jurisdiction of foreign Court—Where a suit is instituted in British India on the judgment of a foreign Court effect will be given to the judgment though that Court had no jurisdiction over the defendant if the defendant appears and defends the suit brought against him in that Court without making any objection to its jurisdiction ( ) for having taken a chance of judgment in his favour it is not right that he should take exception to jurisdiction when judgment goes against him (a) But if he protests against the jurisdiction and the suit is then proceeded with against him the judgment is a nullity and no effect will be given to it in a suit brought on the judgment The protest against jurisdiction must be made at an early stage of the proceedings hence where no objection to the jurisdiction was made until the case had reached the stage of appeal it was held that there was submission to jurisdiction (b) Nice questions sometimes arise as to what amounts to submission to jurisdiction A defendant who employs a pleader in a suit in a foreign Court will not be said to have submitted himself to the juri diction of that Court if the pleader states at the hearing that he has no instructions from his client (c) But if a defendant while protesting against the jurisdiction appears on the argument of the point of jurisdiction there by taking the chance of getting a decision in his favour he will be deemed to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the Court (d) A fortiori it is so if he also pleads on the merits (e) So also if he applies for a review of the order made against him in a foreign court (f) But submission is not voluntary if the appearance is made only to release property seized by a foreign tribunal in attachment or other proceed ings in such a case the judgment of the foreign tribunal is not binding on the party Whether submission was voluntary or it was for the purpose of saving property is a pure question of fact (g) A person who sues in a foreign Court as plaintiff voluntarily submits to the jurisdiction and cannot afterwards dispute it (h)

Agreement to submit to foreign jurisdiction —Where there is an express agreement to submit to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court a judgment pronounced by such Court binds the parties and effect will be given to such judgment in British Indian Courts (i)

The mere fact of entering into a contract of partner hip in a foreign country does not involve an agreement that all matters and disputes arising in connection with the partnership shall be submitted to and therefore lie within the jurisdiction of the Courts of that country (j)

Carrying on business in a foreign country through an agent —Persons who carry on business in a foreign country through an agent submit to the jurisdiction of the Courts of that country by giving the agent a general power of attorney including the right to institute or defend suits relating to matters connected with their business or otherwise (k)

Possession of immovable property in a foreign country —The possession of immovable property in a foreign country gives the Courts of that country jurisdiction to deal with the property itself (l) but not jurisdiction in personam over the po ses or even in regard to obligations connected with that property (m)

Irregularities not affecting jurisdiction—In cases where a foreign Court has jurisdiction or where the defendant has submitted himself to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court the judgment of such Court is not vitiated by irregularities which do not affect the jurisdiction of the Court even when they are such as would in the view of the foreign Court render the judgment there a nullity (n)

Foreign judgment as res judicata—This section applies not only to suits on foreign judgments but also to cases in which the defendant relies on a foreign judgment as a bar to a suit in British India (q)

Clause (b)—In order that a foreign judgment may operate as res judicata it must have been given on the merits of the case whether it was the judgment of a foreign Court in Europe or America or of a foreign Court in Asia or Africa (r) In Keymer v Visvanatham (s) an action was brought in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in England to recover a liquidated amount The defendant failed to comply with an order to answer interrogatories and his defence was struck out and judgment was entered for the amount claimed for the plaintiff under R S C O 31 r 21 corresponding to O II r 21 below The plaintiff subsequently instituted a suit on the judgment in the Madras High Court It was held by the Judicial Committee affirming the judgment of the Madras High Court that the judgment sued on was not given on the merits of the case and that the suit was not maintainable It has also been held by the same tribunal that a judgment on an award obtained in England by default cannot be sued on in India since it is not a judgment on the merits of the case (t) A foreign judgment passed on default of appearance of the defendant duly served with summons on the allegations contained in the plaint without any trial on evidence is not one passed on the merits of the case and a suit cannot be brought on such judgment in any Court in British India (u) but it is otherwise if a decree though ex parte is passed after hearing evidence adduced by the plaintiff (v) Where a suit in a foreign Court is adjourned for settlement and it is agreed between the parties that if the suit is not settled judgment should be passed for the plaintiff and there being no settlement the plaintiff appears on the adjourned date but the defendant does not appear and judgment is passed for the plaintiff according to the agreement the judgment is one on the merits of the case and a suit can be brought on such a judgment in a Court in British India (u) It cannot be said of a judgment that it was not given on the merits merely because it proceeds on a wrong view as to the burden of proof or the legal liability of a party (x)

Clause (c) —The mistake must be apparent on the face of the proceedings In England it has been held that a mere mistake as to English law will not vitiate a foreign judgment even though the mistake may appear on the face of the proceedings (y) In an old Madras case (z) this clause was referred to where a foreign Court had exercised jurisdiction contrary to the principles of International Law but such a case would now fall under clause (a)

Clause (d) —The expression natural justice in this clause refers rather to the form of procedure than to the merits of the particular case The mere fact that a foreign judgment is wrong in law does not make it one opposed to natural justice There must be something in the procedure anterior to the judgment which is repugnant to natural justice (a) Thus a foreign judgment obtained without notice of the suit to the defendant is contrary to natural justice and a suit on such judgment is not maintainable in a British Indian Court (b) So also a judgment based on a third review after two applications for review had been refused (c) or a judgment against a minor defendant for whom no guardian ad litem had been appointed (d) But notice served on an agent empowered to sue and defend suits in the foreign Court is sufficient (e) As to sufficiency of notice if the foreign Court has held service of the notice to be sufficient it must be taken to be correct in the absence of evidence to the contrary (f)

Clause (e) —All judgments whether domestic or foreign are void if obtained by fraud In the case of domestic judgments the fraud must be extrinsic to the matter tried but apparently this rule does not apply to foreign judgments (g)

Clause (f) —Presumably a foreign judgment for a gambling debt would not be enforced in British India

Limitation —Where as in the case of a suit on a contract limitation merely bars the remedy but does not extinguish the right the judgment of a foreign Court is not open to the objection that the suit was barred by the law of limitation applicable in the country where the contract was made (h)

Where the Court of a foreign country holds applying its own law that a suit is not barred by the law of limitation it cannot be said that it has refused to recognize the law of British India because the suit was barred according to the law of British India (i)

PLACE OF SUING

Court in which suits to be instituted

15 [S 15] Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it

Place of suing —This heading governs sections 15 to 25 Place means place in British India and the heading indicates that the Courts referred to in these sections are in British India and the immovable property referred to is also in British India As said by the Lahore High Court these sections regulate the venue in British India and apply only to those places where the Code is in force They deal with matters of domesti concern and prescribe rules for the assumption of territorial juri diction by British Indian Courts in matters within their cognizance and do not govern claims against persons or things wholly outside their jurisdiction (k)

Scope and object of the section —The object of the section in requiring a suitor to bring his suit in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it is that Courts of higher grades shall not be overcrowded with suits This section is a rule of procedure not of jurisdiction and whilst it lays down that a suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade it does not oust the jurisdiction of the Courts of higher grades which they possess under the Acts constituting them (l) Although therefore as a matter of procedure a suit below a certain value ought to be instituted in the Court of the Munsif the Subordinate Judge has still jurisdiction to try it (m) But also as a matter of procedure he ought not to entertain the suit but should return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Munsif as provided by O 7 r 10 [Code of 1882 s 57] (n) This is explained more fully below

Jurisdiction —The word competent used in this section has reference to the jurisdiction of a Court Jurisdiction means the extent of the authority of a Court to administer justice not only with reference to the subject matter of the suit but also to the local and pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction Thus a Presidency Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try suits in which the amount or value of the subject matter exceeds Rs 2 000 this is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards its pecuniary limits Nor can it try suits for specific performance of contracts or for an injunction or for a dissolution of partnership this is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards the subject matter of a suit Nor can it try a suit on a cause of action that has arisen beyond the local limits of the original civil juri diction of the High Court this is said to be the local limits of its jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of a Court may again be original or appellate In the exercise of its original jurisdiction a Court entertains original suits In the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction it entertains appeals The High Courts of Allahabad Patna and Lahore have no original jurisdiction

Court of lowest grade competent to try a suit —There are in British India a large number of Courts The High Courts of Calcutta Madras Bombay Allahabad

Patna Lahore and Rangoon have been established each by a Royal Charter Other Courts in India have been constituted by Acts of the Governor General of India in Council and they are of various grades with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction

In each of the three presidency towns there is a High Court and a Small Cause Court High Courts are empowered in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction to try suits of any value except suits falling within the jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts of which the value does not exceed Rs 100 (o) The pecuniary jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts is confined to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 2 000 (p) Thus both a High Court and a Presidency Small Cause Court are competent to try a suit say for Rs 500 for damages for breach of contract but of these two Courts it is the Small Cause Court which is the Court of the lowest grade competent to try the suit The suit therefore shall be instituted in the Small Cause Court as required by the present section This does not mean that the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit It has jurisdiction to try the suit but in order that the High Court may not be overcrowded with suits the Legislature has established Small Cause Courts and the present section requires that suits which a Small Cau e Court is competent to try shall be brought in that Court There are however certain suits which a Small Cause Court is not competent to try such as suits for the recovery or partition of immovable property or for the fore closure or redemption of a mortgage of immovable property or suits for injunction or for specific performance (q) These suits must be brought in the High Court though the value of the suit may be under Rs 100

Outside the presidency towns there are in each province a number of Courts of different grades established by a Civil Courts Act for each province The Civil Courts in the mofussil of Bombay Madras and Calcutta are divided into three classes as shown in the following table —

The jurisdiction of District Judges and Subordinate Judges except Subordinate Judges of the second class in the Bombay Pre idency extends to all original suits what ever may be the value of the suit But a District Court is a Court of superior grade to a Subordinate Judge s Court for a District Court is the principal Court of original civil juri diction in the district and it is also the Court of appeal from decrees and orders in certain suits passed by other Courts in the district including Courts of Subordinate Judges The jurisdiction of a Subordinate Judge of the second class in the Bombay Presidency extends to all original suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 5 000 The jurisdiction of a District Munsif in the Madras Presidency extends to all original suits (not otherwise exempted from his cognizance) of which the value does not exceed Rs 2 500 The jurisdiction of a Munsif in Bengal North Western Provinces and Assam extends to all original suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 1 000

Both a Subordinate Judge and a Munsif have jurisdiction to try a suit say to recover Rs 500 for rent But of these two Courts it is the Munsif's Court that is the Court of the lowest grade competent to try the suit The suit therefore shall be instituted in the Munsif's Court as required by the present section

As to Civil Courts in the Central Provinces see Act 16 of 1885 in Oudh Act 13 of 1879 in Jhansi Act 18 of 1867 As to Provincial Small Cause Courts see Act 9 of 1887

Where a suit which ought to have been instituted in a Court of lower grade is instituted in a Court of higher grade—Suppose that a suit which under the provisions of this section ought to have been instituted in a Munsif's Court is brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge and the Subordinate Judge instead of returning the plaint under O 7 r 10 tries the suit notwithstanding objection taken by the defendant and that a decree is passed against the defendant Is the decree a nullity? No for the Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to try the suit It is a case of irregularity not affecting the jurisdiction of the Court within the meaning of s 99 below (r) As to cases where a suit is by reason of over valuation brought in a Court of higher grade see notes below Over valuation and under valuation

Where a suit which ought to have been instituted in a Court of higher grade is instituted in a Court of lower grade—In such a case the Court of lower grade ought to return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Court of higher grade [O 7 r 10] If this is not done and the suit is heard by the Court of lower grade the decree is one passed without jurisdiction This is a case of want of jurisdiction as distinguished from a mere irregularity within the meaning of s 99 below (s) As to cases where a suit is by reason of under valuation brought in a Court of lower grade see notes below Over valuation and under valuation

Principles regulating pecuniary jurisdiction—It is the plaintiff's valuation in his plaint which fixes the jurisdiction of the Court and not the amount which may be found and decreed by the Court (t) But jurisdiction may be destroyed if the plaint is so amended as to exceed the pecuniary limits of the Court in which the suit is instituted (u)

Over valuation and under valuation—Although it is the value put by the plaintiff on his suit that prima facie determines jurisdiction it does not follow that a plaintiff is at liberty to assign any arbitrary value to the suit and thus be free to choose the Court in which he should bring the suit (v) Cases do occur in which a plaintiff over values his suit or he under values it The over valuation or under valuation may be erroneous or it may be done intentionally by the plaintiff for the purpose of bringing the suit in a Court different from that in which it would lie if it were properly valued If the over valuation or under valuation is patent on the face of the plaint it is the duty of the Court to which the plaint is presented to return it to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court under O 7 r 10 If [illegible] is not patent on the face of the plaint but objection is taken by the defendant that it is over valued or under valued the Court may require the plaintiff to [illegible] that the suit has been properly valued if there are prima facie grounds [illegible] believing that the suit has not been properly valued (w) but not otherwise (x)

Suppose that a suit has been over valued or under valued so that it is brought in a Court whose grade is higher or lower than that of the Court which would have been competent to try it if the suit were properly valued Is the decree liable to be set aside or reversed by the appellate Court ? No not unless (1) the objection as to jurisdiction by reason of over valuation or under valuation was taken by the defendant in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were framed or (2) the over valuation or under valuation is found by the appellate Court to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits (y) and it matters not whether the over valuation or under valuation was erroneous or intentional (z) See Suits Valuation Act 1887 s 11

The High Court of Calcutta has held that where a suit is under valued with the result that the appeal from the decree in the suit is heard and decided by a District Court instead of by a High Court the decree of the District Court is one passed by a Court without jurisdiction and therefore a nullity This happens in cases where a suit of which the true value exceeds Rs 5 000 is valued at less than Rs 5 000 A brings a suit against B for possession of immovable property in the Court of a Subordinate Judge The real value of the suit exceeds Rs 5 000 but the suit is valued at Rs 2 100 only A decree is passed in the suit for A B files an appeal in the District Court but the appeal is dismissed According to the Calcutta decisions the decree of the District Court is a nullity as being one passed without jurisdiction The reason given is that the true value of the suit being more than Rs 5 000 the proper forum of appeal if the suit had been properly valued would have been the High Court and not the District Court and the result of the under valuation was to oust the jurisdiction of the High Court as the Court of Appeal (a)

Where the subject matter of a suit does not admit of being satisfactorily valued —In some suits the subject matter is not capable of being estimated at a money value e g suits for restitution of conjugal rights suits to remove a karnavan (b) suits to direct registration of a document under the Registration Act 1908 s 77 (c) etc The court fee in such suits is Rs 10 as provided by the Court Fees Act 1870 Sch II art 17 cl vi There is a distinction however between valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction and valuation for the purpose of ascertaining court fee (d) The subject now under consideration is valuation for purposes of jurisdiction

In cases where the subject matter is not capable of being estimated at a money value it is provided by s 9 of the Suits Valuation Act 1887 that the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is what the High Court may specify by rules made under that section Where no rules are made the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta have said that the safest and the most convenient course is to treat the valuation made by the plaintiff as prima facie the true valuation but subject to correction by the Court if the defective valuation has been due to an improper motive and the Court must decide what should be considered to be the proper value (e) The cases in which the above rule was laid down were suits for restitution of conjugal rights In a recent case however the High Court of Madras said that though the rule adopted by the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta might be appropriate in suits for restitution of conjugal rights it was not so in suits which affected property and that the best rule in such cases was to value the suit according to the value of the property liable to be affected thereby (f) Thus a suit to compel registration of an instrument whether the instrument be registrable compulsorily (e g an instrument of gift) or voluntarily (e g a will) is valued in Madras according to the value of the property that would be affected by the suit (g) and a suit to set aside an instrument according to the value of the plaintiff s interest in the instrument (h) The Madras High Court has also held that though the court fee on a suit for the removal of a karnavan is only Rs 10 it does not follow that a District Munsif has jurisdiction to try such a suit where the value of the tarvad property exceeds the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Munsif s Court (i) and that a Munsif has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside an adoption if the value of the property which would be lost to the adopted son if the adoption were set aside exceeds the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court (j) The High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta would probably not agree In fact the High Court of Allahabad has held that the value for the purposes of jurisdiction of a suit to set aside an adoption is not the value of the property which may possibly change hands if the adoption be set aside but the value put upon his plaint by the plaintiff (k) But whichever view be correct it is certain since the enactment of the Suits Valuation Act (s 11) that when once a suit of this class is decided on its merits by the lower Court the decision will not be reversed in appeal on the ground of want of jurisdiction unless the cognizance of the suit by that Court has prejudicially affected its disposal on the merits entirely obtained through his personal obedience, be instituted either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate, or in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain

Explanation—In this section "property" means property situate in British India

Alterations in the section—The words with or without rent or profits in cl (a) are new The word sale in cl (c) has been newly added

Subject to the pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by law—The pecuniary limitations have been referred to in the notes on sec 15 Instances of other limitations are suits under sec. 92 or suits in Bombay against Government or an officer of Government in his official capacity (l) which can only be filed in a High Court or a District Court

Chartered High Courts—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s 120) The High Courts of Calcutta Madras Bombay Allahabad Patna Lahore and Rangoon are Chartered High Courts each having been established by a royal charter The nature and extent of the jurisdiction of these Courts is defined by the charter for each of these Courts. The High Courts of Allahabad Patna and Lahore have no original civil jurisdiction The original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Calcutta Madras and Bombay is defined by clause 12 of the Charter which empowers them to try suits for land or other immovable property if such land or property be situated wholly within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction or in case leave of the Court shall have been first obtained in part within such limits. There have been many conflicting decisions as to the meaning of the expression suits for land or other immovable property in the Letters Patent but the more specific and detailed provisions of this section leave no scope for uncertainty

Scope of the section—As already stated this is one of a group of sections which refer to Courts in British India and to immovable property situate in British India This is specially expressed in the Explanation lest the proviso be construed as giving a mofussil Court jurisdiction in respect of immovable property out of British India for British Indian Courts have no such jurisdiction (m) It specifies the Court in which suits relating to immovable property and suits for the recovery of movable property actually under distraint or attachment are to be instituted Section 19 indicates the Courts in which suits for compensation for wrong done to the person or to movable property are to be instituted. Section 20 is a general section

Clause (a) suits for recovery of immovable property—A suit for the recovery of immovable property situate in Bombay must be instituted in a Court in Bombay having jurisdiction to entertain the suit The Small Cause Court in Bombay has no jurisdiction to try such suit (n) The suit must therefore be brought in the High Court of Bombay Hence it is that the section commences with the words subject to the pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by any law The insertion of the words with or without rent or profits is intended to remove any difficulty there may be where the defendant does not reside within the local limits of the Courts within whose jurisdiction the property is situate

(m) [illegible] (1900) 33 Bom. 373, 2 I C 459
(n) See Presidency Small Cause Courts Act 188[illegible] s 19

Clause (b) suit for partition of immovable property —For cases where the property is in the jurisdiction of different Court see sec 17 post If part of the property is outside British India the Court will deal with the property in British India while declining jurisdiction as to the rest (o) The Lahore High Court has recently held that a British Court can in a partition suit deal with property situate in a Native State (p) But this is incorrect

Clause (c) suit for foreclosure sale or redemption —A mortgages certain immovable property to B to secure payment of money lent to him by B Here A is the mortgagor and B is the mortgagee If A does not repay the loan on the due date B may institute a suit again t A for sale of the mortgaged property so that the mortgage debt may be paid out of the sale proceeds of the property or he may sue for foreclosure of the mortgage The decree in a foreclosure suit provides that if the mortgagor fails to pay the amount that may be found due to the mortgagee within a time specified by the Court (generally six months) the mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property (q) If A offers payment of the mortgage debt to B but B disputes the amount and refuses to reconvey A may sue B for redemption of the mortgage and the Court will pass a decree ordering an account to be taken of what will be due to B and directing that upon A paying to B the amount so due B shall reconvey the property to A (r) Suits for foreclosure sale or redemption must be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the mortgaged property is situate

A Court cannot declare a charge on property wholly outside its jurisdiction and if it did a purchaser under such a decree would be in no better position than a purchaser under a money decree (s)

Clause (d) suits for the determination of any other right to or interest in immovable property —There is no definition of immovable property in the Code Immovable property is defined in the General Clauses Act 1897 s. 3 cl (25) as including land benefits to arise out of land and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth Trees standing on land are immovable property (t) But once the trees are severed from the land they become movable property Growing crops are movable property (see s - cl. 13) Land includes water and a right of fishery in an enclosed water is immovable property (u) Benefits to arise out of land include incorporeal hereditaments such as a right of ferry (v) also pensions and allowances charged upon land and rents Thus a hat is immovable property (w) and so is the life interest of a widow in the rents and profits of her husband s estate (x) Immovable property as stated above includes benefits to arise out of land. Rent that has already accrued due is movable property for it is a benefit which has arisen out of land but rent that is to accrue due is immovable property for it is a benefit to arise out of land Hence a suit for arrears of rent is governed not by the provisions of this section but by those of s 20 and it may be instituted in any one of the Courts specified in that section although in such suit the plaintiff s title to the property of which the rent is claimed may incidentally come in question (y) But a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff s right to rent where such right is denied comes under cl (d) of the present section and must be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate ( ) So also a suit for rent and ejectment under sec 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (a) A suit to recover a share of the sale proceeds of land which have already been reali ed is a suit for money governed by the provisions of s. 20 (b) But a suit by a vendor of land for the recovery of unpaid purchase money against the buyer who refuses to complete the purchase is a suit for the determination of any right to or interest in immovable property within the meaning of cl. (d) (c) A suit by a mortgagee to recover the mortgage debt from the mortgagor personally is a suit for debt governed by the provisions of s. 20 but if in addition to the claim against the mortgagor personally the mortgagee seeks to recover the mortgage debt by sale of the mortgaged property the suit will come under cl. (c) of the present section (d) A suit for maintenance is governed by the provisions of s. 20 but if in addition to the claim for maintenance the plaintiff claims that she is entitled to a charge on immovable property in the hands of the defendant the case is one within cl (d) of this section (e) A suit for dissolution of partnership with the usual ancillary reliefs is not a suit within cl. (d) merely because part of the partnership assets consists of a factory (f)

Income and mesne profits of land situate outside British India—A suit will lie in a Court of British India to establish a right to a share in income derived from grants of land situated outside British India but received by the defendant within the local limits of a British Indian Court (g) Similarly a suit to recover mesne profits of land situate outside British India of which the defendant was in wrongful possession but of which he subsequently delivered possession to the plaintiff may be instituted in a Court in British India (h) Both these cases fall under s. 20 below

Clause (e) wrong to immovable property—This refers to torts affecting immovable property such as trespass (i) nuisance infringement of easements etc

Clause (f) movable property actually under distraint or attachment.—Movable property under attachment constitutes an exception to the general rule that movables follow the person (j) The exception is probably founded on the fact that when such property is under attachment its locality is fixed. The Code follows this rule for the sake of convenience of judicial administration (k) The clause applies to Courts in British India but when movables are under attachment by a foreign Court and the defendant is resident in British India and is able to get the attachment removed it has been held that he can be ordered in execution of a personal decree to recover the property (l)

Proviso to the section—The last paragraph of the section provides that suits to obtain relief respecting or compensation for wrong to immovable property may be instituted at the plaintiff s option either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate or in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain provided—

(1) the property is held by or on behalf of the defendant

(2) the relief sought can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant (m) and

(3) the property is situate in and not beyond British India (n)

The proviso does not apply when the property is in the possession of the plaintiff (o). As the plaintiff has the option of suing in the local jurisdiction the scope of the provis is more limited than in the rule of English Equity

Equity acts in personam—This proviso is an application though in a highl modified form of the maxim Equity acts in personam When it is said tha Equity acts in personam what is meant is that the Court of Equity in England (now th Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice) has jurisdiction to entertain certain suit [suits in cls. (a) (b) and (e) of the present section being entirely excluded] respectin immovable property though the property may be situate abroad if the relief sought ca be obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant The personal obedienc of the defendant can be secured only if the defendant resides within the local limits o the jurisdiction of the Court or carries on business within those limits For in the on case the person of the defendant being within the jurisdiction and in the other hi personal property the court may if he does not comply with the judgment direc the arrest of the defendant and commit him to jail or order that his goods be attache until he complies with the order of the Court (p) But if neither the person of the de fendant nor his personal property is within the jurisdiction the Court will not entertai a suit for a relief respecting immovable property situate beyond its jurisdiction for th Court cannot in that event execute its decree either in rem or in personam and a Cour does not entertain a suit if it cannot enforce its decree in the suit (q)

Suits in personam—Suits in respect of which Courts of Equity in England exercise jurisdiction in personam are called suits in personam The essential featur of suits in personam is that the land in respect of which the suit is brought is situat abroad but the person of the defendant or his personal property is within the jurisdic tion of the Court in which the suit is brought The land being situate abroad th decree cannot be executed in rem that is to say it cannot be executed against the land But the person or the personal property of the defendant being within the jurisdiction the decree can be executed in personam that is to say against the person or persona property of the defendant It must however be noted that the only class of cases in which Courts of Equity in England entertain suits relating to land situated abroad ar cases of contracts fraud and trust Thus suits for specific performance of contract for sale of land (r) and suits for foreclosure (s) sale (t) or redemption (u) in th case of a mortgage of land are cases of contract and the Court of Equity in Englanc will entertain such suits if the contract is made in England and the defendan resides or carries on business in England though the land may be situated abroad Similarly where lands abroad have been acquired by the fraud of a party residing in England a suit to set aside the transaction will be entertained by the Court of Equity in England (v) The Court of Equity will also entertain a suit to enforce express trusts affecting land situate in a foreign country if the trustee reside in England (w) But it has no jurisdiction to entertain suits for recovery (x) or for partition (y) of land or for damages for trespass to land (z) See cl (a) (b) and (e) of this section

Suits for immovable property situate within jurisdiction of different Courts

Provided that, in respect of the value of the subject matter of the suit, the entire claim is cognizable by such Court

Scope and object of the section —The provisions of this section are intended for the benefit of suitors the object being to avoid multiplicity of suits (a) A sues B in a Court in district X on a mortgage of two properties one situate in district X and the other in district Y The Court in district X has jurisdiction under this section to order the sale not only of the property in district X but also of the property in district Y and to sell in execution of its decree the property in district Y (b) A is not obliged to bring two suits one in the Court of district X and the other in the Court of district Y He may bring only one suit in either Court and it matters not if the properties are several one in each district or one property extending over two or more districts (c) The same rule applies to suits for partition (d) and to suits for the recovery of immovable property (e) A can sue in any Court in which any part of the immovable property is situate and he has the right to select his own forum (f) though this right may be controlled by the Court of appeal or the High Court see secs 22 and 23 below But no partition can be made of property situate outside British India (g)

A bona fide compromise will not divest the Court of jurisdiction once jurisdiction has properly vested in it A sues B in a Court in district X to recover possession of two properties one situate in district X and the other in district Y The suit is compromised as regards the property situate in district X This does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court in district X to proceed with the suit as regards the property situate in district Y unless it be shown that the compromise was a mere contrivance to defeat the policy of the rule of procedure as to local jurisdiction (h)

May be instituted —Cases are conflicting as to whether plaintiff suing in respect of a part of a property in one district only is barred from suing as to the other part or the rest of the property in another district in the jurisdiction of another Court But the better opinion is that there is no bar and that the section is permissive (i)

Immovable property within the jurisdiction of different Courts — As already stated the immovable property to which this section refers must be situate in British India Courts in British India have no jurisdiction over property situate outside British India (j) The Court will deal with property in British India if the suit is for partition while declining jurisdiction as to the rest (k) So also if part of the property is in

Execution —When the Court has power to pass a decree as to immoveable property in a different jurisdiction it has also power to execute it See note under sec 38 Jurisdiction of Court executing a decree

Courts – Courts in this section mean Courts to which the Code applies (m)

Chartered High Courts – This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s 120) See notes to s 16 Chartered High Courts.

Place of institution of suit where local limits of jurisdiction of Courts are uncertain

18 [S 16A] (1) Where it is alleged to be uncertain within the local limits of the jurisdiction of which of two or more Courts any immovable property is situated, any one of those Courts may, if satisfied that there is ground for the alleged uncertainty, record a statement to that effect and thereupon proceed to entertain and dispose of any suit relating to that property, and its decree in the suit shall have the same effect as if the property were situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction

Provided that the suit is one with respect to which the Court is competent as regards the nature and value of the suit to exercise jurisdiction

(2) Where a statement has not been recorded under sub section (1), and an objection is taken before an appellate or revisional Court that a decree or order in a suit relating to such property was made by a Court not having jurisdiction where the property is situate, the appellate or revisional Court shall not allow the objection unless in its opinion there was, at the time of the institution of the suit, no reasonable ground for uncertainty as to the Court having jurisdiction with respect thereto and there has been a consequent failure of justice

Uncertainty of local limits of jurisdiction —The uncertainty which the Legislature had in view was the alteration of boundaries by fluvial action (n) The absence of a notification of the boundaries of a district was held to create a reasonable uncertainty (o)

And there has been a consequent failure of justice —These words are new They have been added in order still further to restrict the taking of technical objections as to jurisdiction Alla Ditta v Abdul Qadir (p) is an instance of an objection to jurisdiction being disallowed although no statement was recorded as required by sub sec (1)

Scope of section—Section 16 refers to suits for immovable property which have to be filed in the local jurisdiction Section 20 refers to personal actions such as actions in tort or contract where jurisdiction depends upon the residence of the defendant or the accrual of the cause of action Section 20 overlaps this section which gives an option where the cause of action accrues in the jurisdiction of one Court and the defendant resides in the jurisdiction of another Court The section is limited to torts in British India and to defendants residing in British India (q) It excludes suits for an injunction and suits in respect of torts committed outside British India Such suits fall where the defendant is resident in British India not under this section but under section 20

Wrong—Wrong means a tort or actionable wrong i e an act which is legally wrongful as prejudicially affecting a legal right of the plaintiff (r) But it must be a tort affecting the plaintiff's person or his reputation as in the illustrations or his movable property for tort affecting immovable property such as trespass or nuisance or infringement of easements fall under section 16 (e)

The plaintiff may sue either where the defendant resides or the wrong was committed (s) A wrong may however consist of a series of acts and it is sometimes not easy to specify the place where it was committed Thus in a case from Burma (t) the defendant at Inapon wrongfully obtained a magistrate's order for the seizure of plaintiff's boat at Rangoon and it was held that the Rangoon Court had jurisdiction as the wrong was done at Rangoon

Suits against Government—The word resides refers only to natural persons The words carries on business refer to commercial business The section therefore does not apply to suits against the Secretary of State for damages for a tort where the tort is committed outside the jurisdiction Such suits can only lie in the Court of the place where the tort is committed (u)

20 [S 17] Subject to the limitations aforesaid, every suit shall be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction—

(c) the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises

Explanation I —Where a person has a permanent dwelling at one place and also a temporary residence at another place, he shall be deemed to reside at both places in respect of any cause of action arising at the place where he has such temporary residence

Explanation II —A corporation shall be deemed to carry on business at its sole or principal office in British India, or, in respect of any cause of action arising at any place where it has also a subordinate office, at such place

Alterations in the section —The words every suit have been substituted for the words all other suits in the Code of 1882 The words wholly or in part in cl (c) are new Explanation III to s 17 of the Code of 1882 which related to causes of action in cases of contracts has been omitted in view of the addition of the words wholly or in part in cl (c) See notes below Cause of action in suits on contracts

Subject to the limitations aforesaid —The limitations are the pecuniary and other limitations referred to in s 16 See note under the same heading below that section The former section was a residuary section referring to all other suits and as such was held to be subject to s 19 (v) The present section overlaps section 19 and is subject to section 16 and by implication to section 15

Chartered High Courts—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil juri diction (see s 120)

Scope of the section—This is a general section embracing all personal actions At common law actions are either personal or real Personal actions are also called tran sitory because they may occur anywhere such as actions for tort to person or to movable property or suits on contract Peal actions are actions against the res or property and are called local becau e they must be brought in the forum rei sitæ that is the place where the immovable property is situate An action may also be a mixed action being partly real and partly personal Torts to immovable property such as tre pass and nuisance are mixed actions and are referred to in s 16 (e) Otherwise s 16 deals with real and local actions while secs 19 and 20 deal with personal or transitory actions

The limitations mentioned in this section exclude the real and mixed actions of s 16 and confine the section to personal actions The plaintiff has the option of suing either (1) where the cause of action has accrued or (2) in the forum of the defendant i e where the defendant resides or carries on business or personally works for gain (w) This alternative is shewn in the illustrations which are taken from two old cases the first from B inter v Way (x) and the second from De Sou a v Coles (y)

Actually and voluntarily resides—As to personal actions residence will give jurisdiction even when the cause of action has arisen out ide Briti h India Thus a partner was entitled to sue in the Court of Bulsar for the dissolution of a partnership commenced and carried on in foreign territory because the defendant partner at the time of the institution of the suit resided in Bulsar (z) And a suit for arrears of rent of lands in a Native State may be filed in a British Indian Court in the jurisdiction of which the defendant re ides for rent that has already accrued due constitutes a personal claim (a) On the other hand if the cause of action has ari en in the jurisdiction a Briti h Indian Court may entertain a suit again t a non resident foreigner See note below Suit against a non resident foreigner

The word actually excludes domicile or constructive residence while on the other hand compul ory residence does not confer jurisdiction Under the Code of 18‥9 a man was held to reside at a place where he was lawfully confined but the word voluntarily renders these cases obsolete

The word resides is construed according to the supposed intention of the Legislature (b) and even in this Code it is u ed sometimes in a more restrictive and sometimes in a more extended sen e see s 130 O 3 r 2 and O 2‥ r 1 However there appears to be no distinction between the meaning of the word resides in secs 16 19 and 20 and of the word dwells in cl 12 of the Letters Patent (c) Therefore cases decided on the latter word may be considered authorities on the construction of the former

Dwells within the meaning of clause 12 of Letters Patent—The dwelling or re idence must be of a more or less permanent character It must be of such a nature as to show that the High Court in which a defendant is sued is his natural forum (d)

Therefore when the defendant has a permanent dwelling at one place he cannot be said to dwell at a place where he has lodged for a temporary purpose only e g to defend a suit brought against him (e) or for a change while on leave (f)

Every person is deemed in law to have a dwelling or place of residence and so if he has no permanent place of residence he will be deemed to dwell where he is actually staying at the time Thus where a defendant who was Political Agent at Kolhapur residing in a Government building there sold his furniture and other effects and left Kolhapur on a year s furlough and while en route to England stayed in Bombay for three days before sailing he was held to dwell in Bombay so as to give jurisdiction to the High Court in a suit instituted against him during his stay in Bombay (g) And in a Calcutta case a racing man who had come to Calcutta for a month for racing was held to dwell in Calcutta for he had no other residence at the time when the suit was instituted against him (h)

On the other hand a person may have more than one permanent place of residence at the same time If so he will be deemed to dwell in any one of the places where he is actually staying for the time being and he may be sued in that place In Orde v Skinner (i) the defendant who had a dwelling place at Mussoorie was held under the circumstances of the case to have another dwelling place at Bilaspur Similarly where a defendant spent his time alternately in Calcutta and the mufassal he could be sued in Calcutta where he was residing at the time of institution of the suit (j) But a person who has been living and carrying on business in Bombay for twenty years cannot be said to be residing at Ahmedabad because he has a family house at Ahmedabad which he visits occasionally in such a case Ahmedabad cannot be said to be one of his places of residence (k) Where an Acharya (Hindu head priest) who had his permanent place of residence at Nathdwar where he had been installed on the gadi in 18 9 came to Bombay for the first time in April 1889 at the invitation of his devotees and stayed in a house which he had purchased in 1888 for occasional residence and exchanged visits with his followers it was held in a suit brought against him in Bombay in May 1889 that he did not dwell in Bombay (l) Where a person who was domiciled and resided in Mysore left his house in charge of a servant and hired a house in Madras to which he brought his wife and family and apprenticed himself for a year to a Vakil in Madras it was held in a suit brought against him in Madras some months after his residence there that inasmuch as he had taken up his abode in Madras meaning to remain there for several months and was actually living there when the suit was instituted he dwelled in Madras within the meaning of cl 12 of the Letters Patent (m)

Carries on business —These words also occur in cl 12 of the Letters Patent and the decisions under that clause apply equally to cases arising under ss 16 19 and 20 The word business is used in a restricted sense (n) and is limited to commercial business The expression carries on business is intended to relate to business in which a man may contract debts and is liable to be sued by persons having business transactions with him (o) A Hindu priest who receives offerings from his followers cannot be said to carry on business although the offerings are on such a large scale that he employs servants to collect and keep an account of them (p) A zemindari business has been held not to be the kind of business contemplated by this section (q) The phrase carries on business or personally works for gain is inapplicable to the Secretary of State for India for whatever income is obtained by Government is held for the benefit of the Indian Exchequer (r) A person may carry on business at a place where he has no office or regular establishment Thus a person residing in the mufassal who goes once or twice a week from the mufassal to a friend s house in Calcutta and does business there will be said to carry on business in Calcutta (s) The business need not be caried on personally (t) The phrase carries on business is used as distinct from the phrase personally works for gain It does not involve actual presence or personal effort and a man may carry on buisness in a place through an agent or through a manager or by his servants without having ever gone there It means having an interest in a business at that place a voice in what is done a share in the gain or loss and some control if not over the actual method of working at any rate upon the existence of the business (u) But it is necessary that the following three conditions should concur namely—

(1) The agent must be a special agent who attends exclusively to the business of the principal and carries it on in the name of the principal and not a general agent who does business for any one that pays him Thus a trader in the mufassal who habitually sends grain to Madras for sale by a firm of commission agents who have an independent business of selling goods for others on commission cannot be said to carry on business in Madras (v) So a firm in England carrying on business in the name A B & Co which employs upon the usual terms a Bombay firm carrying on business in the name of C D & Co to act as the English firm s commission agents in Bombay does not carry on business in Bombay so as to render itself liable to be sued in Bombay (w)

(2) The person acting as agent must be an agent in the strict sense of the term The manager of a joint Hindu family is not an agent within the meaning of this condition (x)

(3) To constitute carrying on business at a certain place the essential part of the business must take place in that place Therefore a retail dealer who sells goods in the mufassal cannot be said to carry on business in Bombay merely becau_e he has an agent in Bombay to import and purchase his stock for him He cannot be said to carry on business in Bombay unless his agent made sales there on his behalf (y) A Calcutta firm that employs an agent at Amritsar who has no power to receive money or to enter into contracts but only collects orders which are forwarded to and dealt with in Calcutta cannot be said to do business in Amritsar (z) Similarly a Life Assurance Company which carries on busine s in Bombay employs an agent at Madras who acts merely as a Post Office forwarding propo als and sending moneys cannot be said to do business in Madras (a)

Leave of the Court—Leave of the Court is required when some of the defendants are within and others outside jurisdiction Thus a suit against the members of a firm one of whom resides within jurisdiction may be instituted with leave of the Court as regards the non resident defendants (b) and if the Court refuses leave the suit cannot proceed unless the non resident defendants acquiesce (c) Leave may be given even after institution of the suit (d)

Acquiesce—Section 20 of the Code of 1882 contained a provision that if a defendant who did not reside within the jurisdiction did not apply to the Court for a stay of proceedings he should be deemed to have acquiesced in the institution of the suit (e) but this clause has been omitted from the present Code and there is no express provision for such a presumption in the transfer sections 22 23 and 24 Nevertheless it is submitted that a defendant who appears and fails to apply for a transfer will be deemed to have acquiesced But when the defendant objected to jurisdiction the Calcutta High Court held that he could not be deemed to have acquiesced because he failed to apply for a transfer (f)

Personally works for gain—These words were inserted to give jurisdiction where a person lives outside the local limits of jurisdiction but comes within them to work for gain as in the case of a pleader who lives outside the jurisdiction of the High Court where he practises (g) The word works implies mental or physical effort and does not apply to the receipt of offerings by a Hindu priest (h) As already stated the phrase works for gain is not applicable to the Secretary of State or to Government (i)

Cause of action— Cause of action means every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court (j) It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact but every fact which is necessary to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to a decree (k) Everything which if not proved would give the defendant a right to an immediate judgment must be part of the cause of action (l) It is in other words a bundle of essential facts which it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove before he can succeed in the suit (m) It has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action or in other words to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour (n) The cause of action must be antecedent to the institution of the suit (o) So when the plaintiff filed his suit for ejectment fifteen days before he was entitled to possession he failed for want of a cause of action (p)

Cause of action in suits on contracts—The corresponding section of the Code of 1882 merely referred to the place where the cause of action arose It was not clear whether this meant the whole cause of action or any part of the cause of action The section was therefore amended by section 7 of Act 7 of 1888 which added an Explanation as to the significance of the term when applied to contracts That Explanation was as follows —

Explanation III—In suits arising out of contract the cause of action arises within the meaning of this section at any of the following places namely —

(1) The place where the contract was made

(2) the place where the contract was to be performed or performance thereof completed

(3) the place where in performance of the contract any money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable

This Explanation made it clear that in suits on contracts cause of action meant the whole or any part of the cause of action but it was still not clear that it meant the same in other suits (q) In the present Code the words wholly or in part have been inserted after the word cause of action which makes it plain that all suits may be instituted where the cause of action arises wholly or in part (r) Explanation III has been omitted as no longer necessary but it is nevertheless a correct statement of what is still the law (s)

In a suit for damages for breach of contract the cause of action consists of the making of the contract and of its breach so that the suit may be filed either at the place where the contract was made or at the place where it should have been performed and the breach occurred (t) Thus if a contract is made in Poona to be performed in Poona the whole cause of action arises in Poona and the suit for breach can only be filed in the Poona Court But if the contract is made in Poona to be performed in Belgaum t e suit for its breach can be filed either in the Poona or the Belgaum Court No leave of the Court is required in respect of a suit where part of the cause of action arises out of jurisdiction as in the ca e of High Court suits governed by clause 12 of the Letters Patent

The making of a contract is part of the cause of action and a suit on a contract can always be filed at the place where it wa made (u) The determination of the place where it was made is part of the law of contract A contract by correspondence is made at the place where the letter of acceptance is po ted (v) and if acceptance is by performance of a condition the suit may be instituted at the place where the condition is performed (w)

The performance of a contract is part of the cause of action and a suit in respect of breach can always be filed at the place where the contract should have been performed or its performance completed (x) The usual case is that of a contract for sale of goods and a suit on such a contract may be filed at the place where the goods were deliverable or the price payable (y) Thus if goods for delivery at Allahabad are sold according to sample and paid for in Bombay the buyer may sue in Allahabad if the goods prove not to be of sample quality (z) When a buyer at Kasganj ordered dyes from a seller at Delhi but after paying for and opening the parcel found it to contain only clay he was entitled to sue for damages at Kasganj (a) If not otherwise provided by the contract goods sold are deliverable at the place where they are sold or if not ready at the place of manufacture If they are sent by common carrier at seller s risk the contract is performed at the place where they are delivered to the buyer or if at buyer s risk at the place where they are delivered to the carrier (b) In the case of a contract f o b Bombay the place of per formance is Bombay (c)

The place of performance is generally expressed in the contract and if not so expressed it may be inferred from the nature of the act Thus a contract to repair a house must be performed where the house is situate and an agreement to register a mortgage must be performed at the place where the law requires it to be registered (d) If the place is neither expressed in the contract nor implied from the necessities of the case it will be determined by the Court according to the intention of the parties (e) or the provisions of sections 48 and 49 of the Contract Act Thus in Lleuhellin v Chunnilal (f) the Court said that looking to the ordinary course of business it was the intention of the parties that payment should be made at plaintiff s place of business Similarly in Sreenath Roy v Cally Das (g) a suit for breach of an agreement to mortgage property outside Calcutta was held to lie in Calcutta as the plaintiff s place of business was in Calcutta and the defendant would have to repay the money there to redeem Ordinarily in the case of goods purchased or money borrowed payment must be made at the residence of the seller or lender as the case may be (h) In a contract of service which did not fix the place of payment of salary the salary was held to be payable at the place where the service was rendered (i) When A sued B on a contract of service made at Hyderabad for service rendered at Hyderabad alleging that after service rendered B promised to pay in Madras the Court held that there was no consideration for the latter promise no contract to pay in Madras and therefore no breach of contract in Madras so as to enable A to sue in Madras (j)

If the contract is to be performed at the place where it is made the suit on the contract must be filed there and nowhere else In Dadabhai v Diogo (k) A at Karwar sent money to his agent in Bombay with instructions to negotiate a contract for the purchase and shipment of goods from Bombay to Karwar The agent entered into a contract with B and paid him the money but B failed to ship the goods A sued B at Karwar but the Court there had no jurisdiction for the contract was made and the money paid in Bombay and the performance was also to be in Bombay by the shipment of goods from there

Contract of agency —In suits for an agent s account the cause of action arises at the place where the contract of agency was made or the place where accounts are to be rendered and payment is to be made by the agent (l) In Lal Singh v Kadir Baksh (m) a Sialkot firm sent hides for sale to their commission agent at Calcutta and were entitled to sue at Sialkot for the sale proceeds as the accounts were to be rendered there and the money was payable there In Motilal v Surajmal (n) a Bombay merchant A ordered goods from time to time from B who acted as his pucca adatia at Phulgaon A sued B in Bombay for the amount due to him on the account Tyabji J held (1) that as instructions were sent by A to B from Bombay and (2) that as accounts were rendered by B to A at Bombay and (3) that as demand was made for payment of the amount due from Bombay that payment of the money was intended to be made in Bombay and that a material part of the cause of action arose in Bombay This case was dissented from in Tika Ram v Daulat Ram (o) where the Allahabad High Court held that a commission agent doing an independent business of his own is liable to account at his own place of business This is in accordance with the decisions of the Punjab (p) and Lahore (q) Courts The mere sending of goods does not constitute part of the cause of action and does not give jurisdiction to the Court of the place from which the goods were sent (r)

Place where money expressly or impliedly payable—Part of the cause of action arises where money is expressly or impliedly payable under a contract In Lal Singh v Kadir Baksh (s) the case referred to in the last paragraph the suit could be instituted at Sialkot as it was an implied term of the contract that the agent should pay his principal there When the place of payment is not specified the Court will be guided by the intention of the parties (t) The amount due on a balance struck at foot of an account is payable at the place where the balance was struck although the transactions which were the subject of the account took place elsewhere (u) In Luchmee Chund v Zoravur Mul (v) an account was taken and balance struck on dissolution of a partnership business at Muttra and Privy Council held that although the partnership agreement had been entered into at Rutlam the suit for the balance was properly instituted at Muttra as that was the place where the balance was struck and the amount became due and payable On the other hand the mere fact that a cheque is sent in payment from a particular place will not alter the locality of the suit (w) If under a contract for the sale of goods the price is payable at the seller s place of business but the buyer failing to pay the seller sends his man to the buyer s residence and the buyer pays at his residence the buyer cannot in a suit for compensation for inferiority of the goods take advantage of that fact and sue in the Court of the place where he resides (x) The fact that the creditor is described in a promissory note made at Y as resident of A does not make A the place of payment so as to give jurisdiction to the Court at A No place of performance being fixed the question as stated above is one of intention to be gathered from the contract and the surrounding circumstances (y)

The debtor must find his creditor—Under the English law if a place is appointed for the performance of a contract it is the duty of the creditor to attend at the place named to receive payment but if no place is appointed the debtor is bound to find the creditor and tender him the money in other word there is an implied promise to pay inter alia where the creditor resides or carries on business Under the Indian law as enacted in s 49 of the Indian Contract Act 1872 where no place is fixed for the performance of a promise whether the promise is to deliver goods or to pay money (z) it is the duty of the debtor to apply to the creditor to appoint a reasonable place for the performance of the promise and to perform it at such place But what if the debtor does not apply to the creditor to appoint a place? In such a case it has been held in some cases (a) that the common rule applies and there is an implied promise to pay the creditor wherever he might be and in some (b) that there is no such duty and no implied promise arises The point arose in a recent case before the Judicial Committee (c) and it was held that where no application has been made by the debtor to appoint a place for the performance of the promise the place of performance is to be determined with reference to the intention of the parties and that in so doing regard should be had to the fact that the obligation to pay the creditor involves the further obligation of finding the creditor so as to pay him Their Lordships said Their Lordships do not think that in this state of the authorities it is possible to accede to the present contention that s 49 of the Indian Contract Act gets rid of the inference that should justly be drawn from the terms of the contract itself or from the necessities of the case involving in the obligation to pay the creditor the further obligation of finding the creditor so as to pay him The Common Law rule however applies only when the creditor is within the realm It cannot extend further than it does in England and a debtor in a Native State is not bound to find and pay a creditor in British India (d)

Negotiable Instruments —The cause of action in a suit on a negotiable instrument arises wherever any one of the facts the proof of which is essential to plaintiff s ca e occurs Thus a suit may be filed at the place where the bill was drawn or where it was accepted or dishonoured or where it was payable A suit may be instituted at the place where a hundi was drawn (e) Where a promissory note was signed by the defendant at Secunderabad and delivered to the plaintiff at Madras the Madras Court had jurisdiction as delivery was necessary to complete the plaintiff s title (f) If the promissory note is drawn in the juri diction of the Court the suit may be filed there although the promissee is described in the note as resident of another place (g) But a promissory note is presumed to have been drawn at the place where it purports to have been executed (h) If a hundi was neither drawn nor payable in Bombay it cannot be sued on in the Bombay High Court although it was for the balance of an account of Bombay transactions (i) A hundi may be sued on at the place where it was dishonoured (j) or where it was payable (k) A suit on a promi sory note executed at Vizianagram and payable at Secunderabad or Madras is maintainable in the High Court of Madras (l) A promissory note not expressly payable at Delhi wa delivered to the payee there and it was presumed to be payable there so as to give juri diction to the Delhi Court (m)

The endor ee of a hundi may sue his endor er at the place of endorsement (n) and so may the assignee of a promissory note (o) The Calcutta High Court ha held that an endorsee may sue the drawer and acceptor at the place of endorsement For when D drew a hundi at Benares on his firm at Bombay in favour of B P & Co a firm at Calcutta and the hundi was endorsed by B P & Co to P in Calcutta part of the cause of action was held to arise in Calcutta where the endorsement was made and P could sue in the Calcutta High Court after obtaining leave under clause 12 of the Charter (p) But the case is different when the drawer of a hundi rai es money by negotiating his own hundi A seller of goods drew hundis outside Madras on the buyer firm in Madras and negotiated them outside Madras The Madras firm paid the endor ee and was entitled to sue the drawer in Madras to recover moneys overpaid as the amount of the hundi was in excess of what was due for the price of the goods (q) The over payment in Madras was part of the cause of action but the payment received by the drawer from his endorsee could not be treated as a payment towards the contract The negotiation by the drawer was only a provisional method of realizing the money from persons who were willing to accept the hundi for a small profit and take the trouble of getting paid The High Court of Calcutta has held that if P accepts and pays a hundi in Calcutta for the accommodation of D in Cawnpore and D fails to pay part of the cause of action arises in Calcutta (r)

Partnership—A suit for the dissolution of partnership and for accounts may be instituted either where the contract of partnership was entered into (s) or where the business of the partnership was carried on (t) and if the business was carried on in two places the suit may be filed at either place (u) If the partnership has been dissolved and the accounts taken and balance struck a suit for the balance will lie at the place where the balance was struck (v) The fact that a partnership owns immovable property does not make a suit for the dissolution of partnership and for accounts a suit for immovable property (w)

Cause of action in other suits—In an administration suit the undertaking to administer is part of the cause of action (x) The grant of letters of administration is part of the cause of action in a suit for a legacy (y) In a contract of bailment the payment of the bailee s charges is part of the performance of the contract ( ) and part of the cause of action also accrues at the place where the goods bailed are stored (a) A suit for a breach of a contract of betrothal may be filed where the breach takes place (b) and in case of a contract to marry at the place where the marriage was to have been celebrated (c) A suit for damages for misrepresentation will lie at the place where the misrepresentation was made (d) or for wrongful arrest at the place of arrest (e) or for death caused by negligence at the place where the death took place (f) or for libel at the place of publication (g) The cause of action in a suit to set aside a forged will arises at the place where the will was published (h) or if plaintiff s interest in any property is prejudicially affected by the will the suit may be filed at the place where that property is situate (i) In a suit to set aside a deed of release executed in Calcutta of plaintiff s interest in property in Bombay it was said that the cause of action did not arise wholly in Calcutta but included the effect of the release on the Bombay property (j) In a contract of insurance of goods made in Rangoon and providing for payment at Rangoon the cause of action is at Rangoon and not at the place where the goods were destroyed or damaged (k) But in the case of a life insurance the cause of action accrues at the place where the death occurs (l) A suit for restitution of conjugal rights may be brought in the Court of the place where the husband resides or it may be brought in the Court of the place where the wife resides (m) A suit by a guardian for the custody of his ward removed by the defendant from Allahabad to Lahore may be brought in the Court at Lahore or it may be brought in the Court at Allahabad (n) A suit for damages for infringement of a trade mark may be brought in the Court of place where the defendant resides or in the Court of the place where the defendant publishes advertisements constituting infringement of the trade mark (o) A suit for damages for conversion may be brought in the Court of the place where the conversion originally took place (p)

Place of suing where decree sought to be set aside on ground of fraud —The question whether a suit can be instituted in one District for setting aside a decree passed by a Court in another District has been the subject of many decisions The result of the actual decisions ignoring what are merely obiter dicta may be stated thus A suit to set aside a decree obtained by fraud in Court X where nothing is done beyond transferring the decree for execution to Court Y can only be maintained in Court X that is the Court which passed the decree (q) Where however a decree passed by Court X is transferred for execution to Court Y and the decree holder makes an application to Court Y for execution of the decree (r) or property belonging to the judgment debtor is attached by Court Y (s) or the judgment debtor is arrested by Court Y in execution and released on giving security (t) the judgment debtor may institute a suit in Court Y for a declaration that the decree was obtained by fraud and for an injunction restraining the decree holder from executing the decree Similarly if the judgment debtor s property is sold by Court Y in execution he may sue the decree holder in Court Y for a similar declaration and for setting aside the sale and for possession (u) In all these cases the cause of action arises in part within the jurisdiction of Court Y But where the decree holder has done nothing beyond getting the decree transferred for execution to Court Y and has not made an application to Court Y for execution the judgment debtor as stated above cannot institute a suit in Court Y for setting aside the decree not even if the plaint includes a relief for injunction (v) A High Court will grant leave under its Charter and entertain a suit to set aside a decree of a Mofussil Court for fraud if part of the cause of action has arisen in its jurisdiction (w)

Suit against corporations Explanation II — Irrespective of the Companies Act the domicile of a trading company is fixed by the situation of its principal place of business (x) that is to say its chief office where the central management and control are actually to be found (y) In the case of a company registered under the Companies Act the controlling power is as a fact generally exercised at the registered office and that office is therefore not only for the purposes of the Act but for other purposes the principal place of business (z) This is not however necessarily the case (a) and the question whether that or some other place is the principal place of business of the company is in each case a pure question of fact to be determined upon a scrutiny of the course of business and trading (b) But a Company may have subordinate or branch offices in fifty different jurisdictions and it may be sued in any one of such jurisdictions in respect of a cause of action arising there (c)

Suit against non resident foreigners —The Court has no jurisdiction in a suit against a non resident foreigner on a cause of action which arose wholly without British territory (d) As already stated the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a foreigner resident within the limits of its jurisdiction in respect of a cause of action that has accrued abroad (e) A foreigner is not exempt from the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts (f) If a foreigner resides or himself carries on business or personally works for gain in British India it is clear that he is amenable to the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts But what if a foreigner does not reside or does not himself carry on business or personally work for gain in British India and

(1) the cause of action arises within the local limits of a British Indian Court or

(2) the cause of action arises without British India but the foreigner carries on business through his agent within the local limits of a British Indian Court ?

As to case(1) it is settled that a non resident foreigner who is a subject of a protected Native State may be sued in the Court of British India if the cause of action arises within the jurisdiction of such Court (g) Thus if A a subject of the Native State of Sangli and residing at Sangli borrows money from B at Belgaum B may sue A for recovery of the money in the Belgaum Court for the cause of action arises at Belgaum

As to case (2) the High Court of Bombay in one case held that where no part of the cause of action arose in Bombay it had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a foreigner who did not reside in Bombay but carried on business through an agent in Bombay (h) But that decision was disapproved in the later case of Girdhar v Kassigar (i) The point arose in a later case before the Privy Council but it was left open (j) The Madras High Court has held that the expression carrying on business in cl 12 of the Letters Patent includes carrying on business through an agent in British India by foreigners living outside jurisdiction (k)

21 [New] No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice

This section is new It proceeds on the lines of the Suits Valuation Act 1887 s 11

Chartered High Courts —This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original jurisdiction (l)

Meaning of 'jurisdiction' — By jurisdiction i meant the authority which a Court has to decide matters that are litigated before it or to take cognisance of matters presented in a formal way for its decision The limits of this authority are imposed by the statute charter or commission under which the Court is constituted and may be extended or restricted by the like mean If no restriction or limit is imposed the jurisdiction is said to be unlimited (m)

A limitation may be (1) as to the subject matter (2) as to person (3) as to the pecuniary value of the suit or (4) as to place or it may partake of two or more of these characteristics (n)

(1) Subject matter —Subject matter depends upon the nature of the cause of action and the relief prayed for Thus a Presidency Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain certain suits such as suits for the recovery or partition of immovable property suits for the foreclosure or redemption of a mortgage of immovable property suits for compensation for defamation suits for dis olution of partnership etc see the Presidency Small Cau e Courts Act 15 of 1882 s 19 These and certain other suits are also excepted from the cognizance of a Provincial Small Cause Court see Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1887 s 15 If a Pre idency Small Cause Court or a Provincial Small Cause Court entertains a suit which is excluded from its cognizance its decree is a nullity See also Bombay Civil Courts Act 14 of 1869 s 28 A and Bengal N W P and Assam Civil Courts Act 12 of 1887 s 23

(2) Person —The general rule as stated by Garth C J in Olner v Lave o (o) is that civil Courts here as in England have jurisdiction to try all civil suits against all persons of any nationality within the local limits of their jurisdiction Independent foreign sovereigns are exempt but may submit themselves to jurisdiction by appearance to a writ (p) As to Princes Chiefs and Ambassadors see sec 86

(3) Pecuniary value —Throughout British India there are Courts of different grades having jurisdiction in suits of different amounts in different local areas These have been set forth in the notes to sec 15 where the principles regulating pecuniary jurisdiction are also discussed A suit may be over valued and instituted in a Court of a higher grade or it may be under valued and instituted in a Court of a lower grade but section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act 7 of 1887 now provides that an objection on this ground shall not be entertained by an Appellate or Revisional Court unless (1) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were fir t framed and recorded or (2) the Appellate or Revi ional Court is satisfied that the over valuation or under valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits (q)

(4) Place of suing —This phra e may refer to territorial jurisdiction in its wider sense as where the suit is not cognizable by a Briti h Indian Court being for instance a suit for partition of land outside British India or in its narrower sense of the local venue in British India for suits cognizable by British Indian Courts The words are used in this section in this latter sense with reference to the local venue for which rules have been enacted in the preceding sections 15 to 20 (r) These sections it will be ob erved occur under the heading Place of suing

Waiver of objection to jurisdiction —It is a fundamental rule that a judgment of a Court without jurisdiction is a nullity (s) Where by reason of any limitation imposed upon the authority of a Court a Court is without jurisdiction to entertain any particular action or matter neither the acquiescence nor the express consent of the parties can confer jurisdiction upon the Court nor can consent give a Court jurisdiction if a condition which goes to the jurisdiction has not been performed or fulfilled Where a limited Court takes upon itself to exercise a jurisdiction it does not possess its decision amounts to nothing (t) The general rule therefore is that consent cannot give jurisdiction and want of jurisdiction cannot be waived There is an apparent conflict in the reported cases on this subject owing to the failure to keep clearly in view the distinction between want of jurisdiction and irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction, or to use the phrase of Mookerjee J irregularity in the assumption of jurisdiction (u) The leading case on the subject is Ledgard v Bull (v) decided by the Privy Council in 1886 The suit was for damages and an injunction for infringement of a patent Under the Patents and De igns Act such a suit can only be brought in a District Court but it was brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge who had no jurisdiction to entertain it The suit was eventually tran ferred from the Subordinate Judge s Court to the District Court and there heard and decided The defendant contended that an order for transfer of a suit from one Court to another under s 24 could not be made unless the suit had been brought in a Court having jurisdiction but this contention was overruled The same view was taken by the High Court on appeal The judicial Committee held that the suit having been instituted in a Court which had n juris diction no order of transfer could be made but that the Di trict Court being competent to entertain and try the uit if it were competently brought the defendant could waive the objection to the irregularities of its institution but that he had not done so and the decree of the District Court could not therefore stand and it ought to have been set aside by the High Court Lord Watson in delivering the judgment of the Board said —

> The District Judge was perfectly competent to entertain and try the suit if it were competently brought and their Lordships do not doubt that in such a ca e a defendant may be barred by his own conduct from objecting to irregularities in the institution of the suit [But] when the Judge has no inherent juri diction over the subject matter of a suit the parties cannot by their mutual con ent convert it into a proper judicial process although they may constitute the Judge their arbiter and be bound by his decision on the merits when the e are submitted to him But there are numerous authorities which establi h that when in a case which the Judge is competent to try the parties without objection join i sue and go to trial upon the merits the defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the grounds that there were irregularities in the initial procedure which if objected to at the time would have led to the dismissal of the suit

The principles laid down in Ledgard v Bull were reiterated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Meenakshi Naidu v Subramania Sa tri (w) That was a case in which the High Court of Madras had entertained an appeal from an adjudication from which no appeal was provided for by any enactment Their Lordships held that the decree of the High Court was a nullity In the course of the judgment their Lordships said In the present case there was an inherent incompetency in the High Court to deal with the question brought before it and no consent could have conferred upon the High Court that jurisdiction which it never possessed

These two cases illustrate the distinction between want of jurisdiction and irregular exercise or assumption of jurisdiction Irregular exercise or assumption may be waived as it was in the case of Ledgard v Bull But when the Court is not competent to entertain or try the suit there is a want of inherent jurisdiction which cannot be waived But here again there are certain exceptions If the Court has no jurisdiction owing to some privilege attaching to a party the party may waive that privilege Thus a defendant may waive his status as an agriculturist Another exception is in the case of pecuniary jurisdiction enacted in section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act 7 of 1887 A third exception is this section as to the place of suing or the local venue of suits within the cognizance of British Indian Courts

Objection as to place of suing —The words place of suing occur in the heading to sections 15 to 20 a group of sections which refer to the local venue of suits cognizable by British Indian Courts in British India and in places to which the Code applies Sections 15 to 20 lay down rules as to place of suing and there is no doubt that in this section the expression is used with reference to those rules Those rules regulate the venue in places in British India where the Code applies They deal with matters of domestic concern and prescribe rules for the assumption of territorial jurisdiction by British Indian Courts in matters within their cognizance Section 21 is therefore limited in the same way and has no application to cases not cognizable by British Indian Courts (x) The decision of Privy Council in Setrucherla v Maharaja of Jeypur (y) makes this clear The suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam on a mortgage of property which was partly situate in Vizagapatam and partly in a Scheduled District to which the Code did not apply The defendant did not object to the jurisdiction of the Court and a decree was passed for the sale of the whole of the property On appeal the defendant objected for the first time to the jurisdiction of the trial Court The High Court overruled the objection in view of the provisions of section 21 The Privy Council however upheld the objection on the ground that sec 21 only applied when the right place of suing was one subject to the Code Their Lordships said This is not an objection to the place of suing it is an objection going to the nullity of the order on the ground of want of jurisdiction Another instance is the case of Manjappa v Rajagopala (z) where a Court in the Madras Presidency passed a decree in a suit which was in the cognizance of a foreign Court in Mysore and the High Court held that the defect of jurisdiction could not be cured by section 21 Again when a Subordinate Judge passed a decree on a mortgage of lands in the Santhal Parganas in a suit which the Legislature had withdrawn from the cognizance of the civil Courts as they were under settlement there was no question of the application of section 21 and the Court of execution was entitled to treat the decree as a nullity and to refuse to execute it (a)

On the other hand when the suit is one within the cognizance of British Indian Courts and the want of jurisdiction is only as to local venue under sections 15 to 20 the defect may be waived under this section Thus if the defendant resides in the jurisdiction of Court A and he is sued in Court B on the allegation that he resides in its jurisdiction he cannot raise this objection for the first time in appeal (b) nor can he in a subsequent suit set aside the decree as a nullity (c) If a suit on a mortgage of land in the jurisdiction of Court B is instituted in Court A contrary to the provisions of section 16 and the defendant does not object the decree is not a nullity (d) So also when the territorial jurisdiction of the Court is altered by a notification during the pendency of the suit (e)

"Objection as to place of suing when to be taken—The general rule is that an objection to jurisdiction may be taken at any stage of the proceedings provided there are materials on the record to sustain it (f) It may be taken for the first time in appeal or in second appeal (g) or in revision (h) or after remand in second appeal (i) or in appeal to the Privy Council provided the objection is patent on the face of the proceedings (j) This section which is framed on the analogy of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act is an exception to this general rule

Under this section the objection must be taken at the earliest opportunity in the Court of first instance and in cases where issues are settled at or before settlement of issues Even then the Court of Appeal or Revision will not allow the objection unless there has been a failure of justice If the objection is raised for the first time in appeal or revision it is excluded by the terms of the section (k) In the original suit however the objection may be raised at any time before final judgment (l)

Section 21 and execution proceedings—The waiver extends to execution proceedings and the judgment debtor cannot object to the validity of the decree in execution proceedings In Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v Chidamabaram (m) Wallis C J said The effect of the section in my opinion is that objections which the appellate or revisional Court is thereby precluded from allowing must be considered cured for all purposes unless taken before the passing of the decree of the original Court The ordinary way of questioning a decree passed without jurisdiction is on appeal or revision and if this is forbidden a Court of first instance cannot in execution do that which the appellate or revisional Court is precluded from doing But it is different where after the passing of a preliminary mortgage decree the Court which passed it ceases to have territorial jurisdiction over any of the mortgaged properties In such a case failure on the part of the mortgagor to object to the passing of the final decree precludes him from disputing the validity of the decree but not from objecting to the jurisdiction of the Court to order a sale (n)

When a Court executing a decree transferred to it attached and sold properties after territorial jurisdiction had been withdrawn from it the Madras High Court held that the judgment debtor s failure to object estopped him from questioning the validity of the sale but that there was no estoppel against a subsequent purchaser of the same property at a sale held in execution of a decree passed against the same judgment debtor in another suit for the estoppel of the judgment debtor did not operate against such purchaser (o) The same Court has also held that if a Court continues to execute a decree against immovable property after territorial juri diction has been withdrawn from it the judgment debtor s failure to object will preclude him from raising the point in appeal (p)

Section 21 and new suit—It has been held in Madras (q) and Lahore (r) that if the defendant does not object to jurisdiction and a decree is passed against him he cannot in a sub equent suit set aside the decree for want of jurisdiction In a Calcutta case (s) a landlord filed a suit for rent and ejectment under sec 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and obtained a decree in execution of which the tenure was sold and pur chased by himself The land was situate in the jurisdiction of another Court but the defendant had raised no objection When the landlord went to take possession the tenant defendant filed a suit for a declaration that the decree had been made and the sale held without jurisdiction It was contended for the landlord that the sale were validated by section 21 but this contention was overruled Mookerjee J said that section 21 is an exception to the well established rule that where a Court has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject matter of the suit its decree is a nullity even though the parties may have consented to jurisdiction of the Court This exception cannot obviou ly be so interpreted as to have a wider application than what is justified by its terms It is impos ible for us to hold that section 21 debars the defendant from questioning the validity of the execution sale which is the root of the title of the plaintiff In the view taken by the learned judge the decree was validated by section 21 but the execution sale was a nullity It is submitted however that the view taken by the Madras High Court is correct that when once the objection to jurisdiction is waived under section 21 it is waived for all purposes

Unless there has been a consequent failure of justice—Even though the objection has been raised at the earliest opportunity and wrongly disallowed the judgment will not be disturbed unless the trial in the wrong Court has led to a failure of justice (t) In order to ascertain whether there has been a failure of justice the appellate Court must go into the merits of the case and form an opinion upon the justice or otherwise of the decision of the first Court (u)

Remand—There is no question of territorial juri diction when a suit is remanded by a Court of Appeal for jurisdiction then depends entirely upon the order of remand (v)

Power to tr n fer uit which may be in tituted more than one Court

22 [S 22] Where a suit may be instituted in any one of two or more Courts and is instituted in one of such Courts, any defendant after notice to the other parties, may at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement apply to have the suit transferred to another Court and the Court to which such application is made after considering the objections of the other parties (if any), shall determine in which of the several Courts having jurisdiction the suit shall proceed

Transfer where plaintiff has a choice of Courts —The power of transfer given by this section is not a general power as in section 24 It is limited to cases in sections 16 and 20 where plaintiff has the option to sue in more Courts than one (w) Prima facie plaintiff as arbiter litis has the right to select his own forum (x) That right is controlled by the power of transfer but it is a right that ought not lightly to be interfered with (y)

Grounds of transfer —See note to section 24 under the same heading

Notice —The provisions of this section as to notice and time of application are mandatory (z) Notice must be before application and to co defendants as well as to the plaintiff

Stay of suit —Section 20 of the Code of 1882 provided for stay of proceedings in order to compel the plaintiff to take his case to another Court This has been omitted as sufficient provision has been made by the power of transfer in sections 22 to 24 But the Court has an inherent jurisdiction to stay any suit which is an abuse of its process Whether the institution of the suit in a particular Court is an abuse of the process of that Court is a question of fact In a suit filed in the Bombay High Court the fact that both the parties and the witnesses of the defendants were residents of Wardha in the Central Provinces was held not to justify an order for the stay of the suit (a) The High Court has also power to stay a suit in another Court See note under O 39, r 1

23 [Ss 22, 23, 24] (1) Where the several Courts having jurisdiction are subordinate to the same Appellate Court, an application under section 22 shall be made to the Appellate Court

(2) Where such Courts are subordinate to different Appellate Courts but to the same High Court, the application shall be made to the said High Court

(3) Where such Courts are subordinate to different High Courts the application shall be made to the High Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the Court in which the suit is brought is situate

Chartered High Courts —Sections 22 and 23 do not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction (b)

Subordinate Courts —Subordination of Court is regulated by sec 3 A Court of a subordinate Judge is subordinate to the District Court no matter what the forum of appeal may be in the particular case for the transfer of which application is made (c)

Form —For form of notice of application see App H form no

Jurisdiction —An order for the transfer of a suit from one Court to another cannot be made under this section unless the suit has been in the first instance brought in a Court that has jurisdiction to try it But if after the transfer is made the parties without objection join issue and go to trial upon the merits the order of transfer cannot subsequently be impeached (g) The same rule applies to appeals (h) See note Waiver of objection to jurisdiction under sec 21 Conversely a suit cannot be transferred to a Court which has not jurisdiction to try it (i) Thus a High Court cannot transfer to a District Court an insolvency petition presented to it under the Presidency towns Insolvency Act (j) Nor can a District Court transfer a suit from one subordinate Court to another subordinate Court which has been newly created and empowered to try subsequently instituted suits (k) See notes to s 21

General power of transfer —This section gives a general power of transfer of all suits appeals and other proceedings and is not limited like section 22 to suits in which the plaintiff has the option of suing in more than one Court It may be exercised at any stage of the proceeding and even suo motu without an application

Grounds of transfer —As stated in the notes on section 22 the plaintiff as arbiter litis or dominus litis has the right to choose his own forum or rather any forum the law allows him This right is subject to control under sections 22 to 24 The burden lies on the applicant to make out a strong case for a transfer A mere balance of convenience in favour of proceedings in another Court is not a sufficient ground (l) though it is a relevant consideration (m) As a general rule the Court should not interfere unless the expenses and difficulties of the trial would be so great as to lead to injustice or the suit has been filed in a particular Court for the purpose of working injustice (n) What the Court has to consider is whether the applicant ha made out a ca e to justify it in closing the doors of the Court in which the suit is brought to the plaintiff and leaving him to seek his remedy in another jurisdiction (o) Where in a suit for partition instituted in the Court of 24 Pergunnahs the parties were residents of Calcutta and the major portion of the immovable property was also situate in Calcutta the suit was transferred to the original side of the High Court of Calcutta on the ground principally of convenience (p) In a suit to set aside certain deeds of gift executed by a decea ed person who e heir the plaintiff claimed to be on the ground that the deceased was not of a sound mind and that the deeds were procured by undue influence the High Court of Allahabad ordered the suit to be transferred to the Court of the place where the deeds were executed on the ground that the witnesses were residents of that place and that the defence must turn upon local evidence (q) Another ground of transfer is a pecuniary or other personal interest in the presiding Judge (r) or a reasonable apprehension of the litigant that he will not get a fair trial (s)

Notice —No notice is necessary if the Court acts suo motu If an application is made notice must be given by the Court and not by the party as in sec 22 The provision as to notice is imperative and an order for transfer made without notice will be set aside (t) and so will an ex parte decree made by a Court to which the suit has been transferred without notice to the defendant (u) On the other hand the Madras High Court treats the matter of notice as one of practice and procedure and holds that notice may be waived (v) and that want of notice is an irregularity which does not invalidate the order of transfer (w)

At any stage —These words and the substitution of the word pending for instituted settle a doubt as to whether a suit could be transferred or withdrawn after the hearing had commenced The High Courts of Bombay Madras and Allahabad held that a suit could be transferred or withdrawn at any stage even after the hearing had commenced and even in the course of execution proceedings (x) On the other hand the Calcutta High Court held that there was no power to interfere after the hearing had commenced and no power to transfer an execution proceeding (y) It is now clear that the former view is correct

Pending before it —Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 it was held that a District Judge had no power to transfer to a subordinate Court a suit pending before him elf (z) Clause (a) confers this power on District Courts and High Courts

District Court —District Court in this section means a Court of unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction An order of transfer under this section cannot therefore be made by an Assistant Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited (a)

Clause (a) Court subordinate to it —A decree for di solution of marriage under the Indian Divorce Act 4 of 1869 made by the Divi ional Judge of Nagpur is subject to confirmation by the High Court of Bombay but after the Bombay High Court has confirmed the decree an application for alimony must be made to the Court at Nagpur The Bombay High Court cannot entertain it nor can it transfer the application to the Nagpur Court for that Court i not subordinate to it (b) A senior Subordinate Judge in the Punjab cannot transfer a ca e from his Court to that of a junior Subordinate Judge for the latter is not subordinate to him (c)

Clause (a) Suit —The High Court of Allahabad has held that the word suit in this clause includes proceedings in execution (d) This is no doubt correct for an execution proceeding is a proceeding in a suit and would therefore not be included in the expression other proceeding which must therefore have the same meaning as all proceedings in any Court of civil justice in section 141 See note on that section The words dispose of have been added evidently with reference to mi ellaneous proceedings

Clause (b) Other proceedings —The words other proceedings include an insolvency petition (e) but not a proceeding under s 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (f) The Madras High Court has held that a District Court has power under this clause to withdraw to its own file proceedings in execution transmitted by it to a Subordinate Court (g)

Competent Court—Under cl b (ii) the transfer of a suit must be to a Court competent to try or dispose of it The High Court therefore has no power to transfer a Small Cause suit pending before a Subordinate Judge to the Court of a District Munsif where the Small Cause jurisdiction of the Munsif is less than the value of the Small Cause suit (h) Nor has the High Court power to transfer an insolvency petition made under the Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 and pending before a Subordinate Judge to the Judge of the High Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction (i)

Re transfer—Clause (b) (iii) gives power to re transfer a suit to the Court from which it was withdrawn There was no such power in the Code of 1882 and the cases in footnote (j) are obsolete

Sub section (4) Court of Small Causes—The High Courts of Allahabad (k) Madras (l) and Patna (m) and latterly also the High Courts of Bombay (n) and Calcutta (o) are agreed that the expression Court of Small Causes in sub sec (4) includes a Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes The High Courts of Bombay (p) and Calcutta (q) at one time held that it was restricted to a Court established under Act 9 of 1887 but those decisions are no longer law

The provisions of sub section (4) do not constitute the Court to which the suit is transferred a Small Cause Court (r) It is however deemed to be a Small Cause Court for the purposes of the suit (s) with the result that its procedure in the trial of the suit is governed by the provisions of Act 9 of 1887 (t) and no appeal lies if there is no appeal under that Act (u) The procedure will be that of a Small Cause Court even though the District Judge transferring the suit directs it to be tried as a regular suit for he has no jurisdiction to give such a direction (v) The decree will not operate as res judicata in a suit which the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain (w) The same principles apply where on the retirement or transfer of a Subordinate Judge having Small Cause Court powers the suit is transferred by order of the District Judge to another Judge not invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction and no appeal will lie from a decree passed by the latter Judge (x)

25 [Ss 20 21] (1) Where any party to a suit, appeal or other proceeding pending in a High Court presided over by a single Judge objects to its being heard by him and the Judge is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for the objection, he shall make a report to the Governor General in Council, who may, by notification in the Gazette of India, transfer such suit, appeal or proceeding to any other High Court

Power of Governor General in Council to transfer suit

(2) The law applicable to any suit, appeal or proceeding so transferred shall be the law which the Court in which the suit appeal or proceeding was originally instituted ought to have applied to such case

The object of this section is to empower the Governor General in Council to transfer cases from one High Court to another under certain circumstances The section proceeds on the analogy of s 527 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898

INSTITUTION OF SUITS

26 [S 45] Every suit shall be instituted by the presentation of a plaint or in such other manner as may be prescribed

Institution of suits

Suit—A proceeding that does not commence with a plaint is not a suit (y) The essential provisions as to procedure in suits is enacted in sections 26 to 35 A Details have been relegated to the rules of procedure in the first Schedule For institution of suits see O 4 r 1

Changes introduced by the section—The words or in such other manner as may be prescribed are new No other manner of instituting suits has hitherto been prescribed

SUMMONS AND DISCOVERY

27 [S 64] Where a suit has been duly instituted, a summons may be issued to the defendant to appear and answer the claim and may be served in manner prescribed

Summons to defendant

Issue and service of summons—See O 5 below

28 [S 85] (1) A summons may be sent for service in another province to such Court and in such manner as may be prescribed by rules in force in that province

(2) The Court to which such summons is sent shall, upon receipt thereof, proceed as if it had been issued by such Court and shall then return the summons to the Court of issue together with the record (if any) of its proceedings with regard thereto

See note to O 5 r 23

29 [S 650A] Summonses issued by any Civil or Revenue Court situate beyond the limits of British India may be sent to the Courts in British India and served as if they had been issued by such Courts

Service of foreign summonses

Provided that the Courts issuing such summonses have been established or continued by the authority of the Governor General in Council, or that the Governor General in Council has, by notification in the Gazette of India, declared the provisions of this section to apply to such Courts

By notification—For notifications issued under this section see General Statutory Rules and Orders Vol. I pp 642 655 and Vol. IV pp 682 684

30 [New] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed the Court may, at any time, either of its own motion or on the application of any party —

Power to order discovery and the like

(a) make such orders as may be necessary or reasonable in all matters relating to the delivery and answering of interrogatories, the admission of documents and facts, and the discovery inspection production, impounding and return of documents or other material objects producible as evidence

(b) issue summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents or such other objects as aforesaid,

(c) order any fact to be proved by affidavit

Delivery and answering of interrogatories—See O 11 below

Admission of documents and facts—See O 12 below

Discovery and inspection—See O 11 below

Production impounding and return of documents—See O 13 below

Summonses to persons to give evidence—See O 16 below

Proof of facts by affidavits—See O 19 below

31 [New] The provisions in sections 27, 28 and 29 shall apply to summonses to give evidence or to produce documents or other material objects

Summons to witness

32 [New] The Court may compel the attendance of any person to whom a summons has been issued under section 30 and for that purpose may—

Penalty for default

(a) issue a warrant for his arrest

(b) attach and sell his property,

(c) impose a fine upon him not exceeding five hundred rupees,

(d) order him to furnish security for his appearance and in default commit him to the civil prison

See O 16 rr 10 13 r 17 and r 21

To whom a summons has been issued —This section applies only if a summons has been issued. It does not apply where a person is merely ordered to produce a document (z)

JUDGMENT AND DECREE

33 [S 198] The Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment, and on such judgment a decree shall follow

See O 20 r 1

On such judgment a decree shall follow —Under this section it is imperative that a decree shall follow the judgment and as it is the duty of the Court to comply with the provisions of the law the Court's failure to prepare a decree should not deprive a party of his right of appeal. The appeal should not be dismissed and the appellant should be allowed time to move the lower Court to prepare a decree (a)

INTEREST

34 [S 209] (1) Where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money the Court may, in the decree order interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable to be paid on the principal sum adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree in addition to any interest adjudged on such principal sum for any period prior to the institution of the suit, with further interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable on the aggregate sum so adjudged, from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit

(2) Where such a decree is silent with respect to the payment of further interest on such aggregate sum as aforesaid from the date of the decree to the date of payment or other earlier date, the Court shall be deemed to have refused such interest and a separate suit therefore shall not lie

Scope of the section —This section applies only where the decree is for the payment of money It does not apply where the decree is for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge See notes below under the head Interest in suits for enforcement of mortgage There is no analogy between interest awarded under this section and mesne profits (b)

The three divisions of interest —Interest that may be awarded to a plaintiff in a suit for money may be divided into three heads according to the period for which it is allowed namely—

(1) interest accrued due prior to the institution of the suit on the principal sum adjudged (as distinguished from the principal sum claimed)

(2) additional interest on the principal sum adjudged from the date of the suit to the date of the decree at such rate as the Court deems reasonable

(3) further interest on the aggregate sum adjudged i e the principal sum plus interest from the date of the decree (i) to the date of payment or (ii) to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit at such rate as the Court deems reasonable

Interest up to date of suit is a matter of substantive law and the section does not refer to payment of interest under the first head (c) It applies only to the second and third heads

I Interest prior to date of suit —Interest antecedent to suit is not a matter of procedure but a brief note on the subject will not be out of place The law on the subject may be considered under the following two heads

(1) where there is a stipulation for the payment of interest at a fixed rate

(2) where there is no stipulation at all for the payment of interest

1 If there is a stipulation for the rate of interest the Court must allow that rate up to the date of the suit however high it may be [Usury Laws Repeal Act 28 of 1855 s 2] subject to the two following exceptions (1) if the rate is penal the Court may award interest at such rate as it deems reasonable [Indian Contract Act 1872 s 74] and (2) even if the rate is not penal the Court may reduce it if the interest is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair [Usurious Loans Act 10 of 1918 s. 3].

2 If there is no express stipulation for payment of interest the plaintiff is not entitled to interest except in the following cases —

(i) Mercantile usage —Where it is allowed by mercantile usage (d)

(b) Dwarka nath v Debendra (1906) 33 Cal 125.

(ii) Statutory right to interest—Interest is payable where a right to it or an authority for its allowance or payment is conferred by statute Section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act 26 of 1881 provides that when no rate of interest is specified in a promissory note or bill of exchange the Court shall notwithstanding any agreement relating to interest between the parties award interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date on which the amount claimed became due and payable Similarly the Interest Act 32 of 1839 enacts that where there is no stipulation to pay interest but the amount claimed is a sum certain (as distinguished from unascertained damages) and is payable at a certain time by virtue of some written instrument the Court (e) may allow interest at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the date on which the amount became payable If no time is fixed for the payment of the amount the Court may award interest at the rate aforesaid from the time the creditor demands payment in writing intimating to the debtor that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand up to the date of payment The provisions of the Interest Act 32 of 1839 are in the main a reproduction of the provi ions of Lord Tenterden s Act [3 and 4 Wm 4 c 42 s 48] The House of Lord in London Chatham and Dover Railway Co v South Eastern Railway Co (f) the modern leading case on interest held that the sum certain within the meaning of that Act must be a certain sum which is one absolutely and in all events due and not a mere provisional payment to be made by one party to the other

(iii) Implied agreement—Where an agreement to pay interest can be implied from the course of dealing between the parties (g)

In the London Chatham and Dover Railway Company s case the House f Lords held that interest cannot be given by way of damag s for detention of a debt

II Interest from date of suit to date of decree—The rate of interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree is in the discretion of the Court (h) and this discretion is not excluded even if a fixed rate is mentioned in the contract as payable up to reali ation (i) But though the rate of interest for the aforesaid period is discretionary the Court should in the exercise of that di cretion award interest at the contract rate unless it would be inequitable to do so (j) The Court may under this head award interest in a suit for money although interest is not specifically asked for in the plaint (k) [see O 7 r 7]

It i well established that no interest can be allowed on damages for any period prior to the suit (l) but there is a conflict of decisions whether intere t can be allowed under this section on damages from the date of the suit it being held in some cases that it can be allowed (m) and in some that it cannot be allowed (n)

Where the High Court has refused to exercise its discretionary power t allow interest from date of suit the Judicial Committee as a rule will not interfere (o)

III Interest from date of decree to date of payment—The rate of nterest from the date of the decree to the date of payment is also in the discretion of the Court The plaintiff getting security of a decr e has his intere t reduced in

(ii) Statutory right to interest —Interest is payable where a right to it or an authority for it allowance or payment is conferred by statute Section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act 26 of 1881 provides that when no rate of interest is specified in a promissory note or bill of exchange the Court shall notwithstanding any agreement relating to interest between the parties award interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date on which the amount claimed became due and payable Similarly the Interest Act 32 of 1839 enacts that where there is no stipulation to pay interest but the amount claimed is a sum certain (as distinguished from unascertained damages) and is payable at a certain time by virtue of some written instrument the Court (e) may allow interest at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the date on which the amount became payable If no time is fixed for the payment of the amount the Court may award interest at the rate aforesaid from the time the creditor demands payment in writing intimating to the debtor that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand up to the date of payment The provisions of the Interest Act 32 of 1839 are in the main a reproduction of the provision of Lord Tenterden s Act [3 and 4 Wm 4 c 42 s 48] The House of Lord in London Chatham and Dover Railway Co v South Eastern Railway Co (f) the modern leading case on interest held that the sum certain within the meaning of that Act must be a certain sum which is one absolutely and in all events due and not a mere provisional payment to be made by one party to the other

(iii) Implied agreement —Where an agreement to pay interest can be implied from the course of dealing between the parties (g)

In the London Chatham and Dover Railway Company s case the House of Lords held that interest cannot be given by way of damages for detention of a debt

II Interest from date of suit to date of decree —The rate of interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree is in the discretion of the Court (h) and this discretion is not excluded even if a fixed rate is mentioned in the contract as payable up to realisation (i) But though the rate of interest for the aforesaid period is discretionary the Court should in the exercise of that discretion award interest at the contract rate unless it would be inequitable to do so (j) The Court may under this head award interest in a suit for money although interest is not specifically asked for in the plaint (k) [see O 7 r 7]

It is well established that no interest can be allowed on damages for any period prior to the suit (l) but there is a conflict of decisions whether interest can be allowed under this section on damages from the date of the suit it being held in some cases that it can be allowed (m) and in some that it cannot be allowed (n)

Where the High Court has refused to exercise its discretionary power to allow interest from date of suit the Judicial Committee as a rule will not interfere (o)

III Interest from date of decree to date of payment —The rate of interest from the date of the decree to the date of payment is also in the discretion of the Court The plaintiff getting security of a decree has his interest reduced in

aggreg ite sum so adjudged, from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit

(2) Where such a decree is silent with respect to the payment of further interest on such aggregate sum as aforesaid from the date of the decree to the date of payment or other earlier date, the Court shall be deemed to have refused such interest and a separate suit therefore shall not lie

Scope of the section —This section applies only where the decree is for the payment of money It does not apply where the decree is for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge See notes below under the head Interest in suits for enforcement of mortgage There is no analogy between interest awarded under this section and mesne profits (b)

The three divisions of interest —Interest that may be awarded to a plaintiff in a suit for money may be divided into three heads according to the period for which it is allowed namely—

(1) interest accrued due prior to the institution of the suit on the principal sum adjudged (as distinguished from the principal sum claimed)

(2) additional interest on the principal sum adjudged from the date of the suit to the date of the decree at such rate as the Court deems reasonable

(3) further interest on the aggregate sum adjudged i e the principal sum plus interest from the date of the decree (i) to the date of payment or (ii) to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit at such rate as the Court deems reasonable

Interest up to date of suit is a matter of substantive law and the section does not refer to payment of interest under the first head (c) It applies only to the second and third heads.

I Interest prior to date of suit —Interest antecedent to suit is not a matter of procedure but a brief note on the subject will not be out of place The law on the subject may be considered under the following two heads

(1) where there is a stipulation for the payment of interest at a fixed rate

(2) where there is no stipulation at all for the payment of interest

1 If there is a stipulation for the rate of interest the Court must allow that rate up to the date of the suit however high it may be [Usury Laws Repeal Act 28 of 18.. s 2] subject to the two following exceptions (1) if the rate is penal the Court may award interest at such rate as it deems reasonable [Indian Contract Act 18.. s 74] and (2) even if the rate is not penal the Court may reduce it if the interest is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair [Usurious Loans Act 10 of 1918 s. 3].

2 If there is no express stipulation for payment of interest the plaintiff is not entitled to interest except in the following cases —

In the London Chatham and Dover Railway Company s ca e the House f Lords held that interest cannot be given by way of damag s for detention of a debt

II Interest from date of suit to date of decree —The rate f interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree is in the di cret on of the Court (h) and this dis retion is not excluded even if a fixed rate is mentioned in the contract as payable up to reali ation (i) But though the rate of interest for the aforesaid period is discretionary the Court should in the exerci e of that discretion award interest at the contract rate unless it would be inequitable to do so (j) The Court may under this head award interest in a suit for money although interest is not specifically asked for in the plaint (k) [see O 7 r 7]

35 [Ss 218 221 Jud Act, 1890, s 5 R S C, O 45, r 1]

Costs

(1) Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, and to the provisions of any law for the time being in force, the costs of and incident to all suits shall be in the discretion of the Court, and the Court shall have full power to determine by whom or out of what property and to what extent such costs are to be paid, and to give all necessary directions for the purposes aforesaid The fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit shall be no bar to the exercise of such powers

(2) Where the Court directs that any costs shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reasons in writing

(3) The Court may give interest on costs at any rate not exceeding six per cent per annum, and such interest shall be added to the costs and shall be recoverable as such

Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed.—Prescribed means by rules contained in or made under the Act see sec 2 (16) and (18) The following rules contain express provision as to costs —O 11 r 3 (costs of interrogatories) O 12 r 2 (proof of documents) O 21 r 72 (3) (application to set aside a sale) O 23 r 1 (3) (withdrawal of suit) O 24 r 4 (costs on payment into Court) O 32 rr 4 & 5 (next friends and guardians) O 33 rr 10 11 & 16 (pauper suits) O 35 r 3 (interpleader suits) O 34 (mortgage suits) But nothing in the rules as to pauper suits limits the discretion of the Court under sec 35 to apportion costs (h)

The provisions of any law—The discretion to award costs is limited by certain enactments e g the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act 15 of 1882 sec 22 (i) the Land Acquisition Act 1 of 1894 sec 27 (j)

the generality of cases (p) Where the rate of interest charged and decreed was 24 per cent the Lahore High Court refused to allow interest after decree (q) If the Court awards interest from the date of the decree but no rate is specified the decree holder will be entitled to interest at the Court rate which is usually 6 per cent (r) But if no such interest is awarded by the decree it will be deemed to have been refused (s) see sub sec (2) In a case decided by the Privy Council in 1878 it was held that when the decree is silent about future interest it cannot be recovered in execution proceedings but the decree holder may by suit recover damages for the detention of the decretal amount (t) That was a case under the Code of 1859 S 193 of that Code which relates to interest did not contain any such provision as is contained in sub sec (2) of the present section This provision was first introduced by Act 7 of 1888 The Privy Council ruling was followed in a recent Calcutta case but the decision it is admitted is in that respect incorrect (u)

Illustration of the above rules —A lends Rs 5 000 to B to be repaid with interest at the rate of 18 per cent per annum In a suit by A to recover the amount of the loan with interest at the rate aforesaid it is contended on behalf of B that the rate of interest is penal (Contract Act s 74) The Court finds that the rate of interest is not penal nor is the transaction substantially unfair Hence—

(1) as regards interest [on Rs 5 000] from the date of the loan to the date of the suit the Court must allow it at the contract rate that is at the rate of 18 per cent per annum Usury Laws Repeal Act s 2

(2) as regards interest [on Rs 5 000] from the date of the suit to the date of the decree the Court may allow it at the contract rate that is at the rate of 18 per cent per annum or it may in its discretion allow it at a lower rate or may disallow it altogether

(3) as regards interest from the date of the decree to the date of payment on the aggregate sum adjudged [i e Rs 5 000 plus the interest adjudged under the above two heads] the Court may allow interest at such rate as it deems reasonable This rate is usually 6 per cent As to interest on costs see s 35 cl (3)

Interest in mortgage suits —The law on the subject is now codified in O 34 r 11

Rule of damdupat —This is a rule of Hindu law according to which interest exceeding the amount of the principal sum cannot be recovered at any one time This rule is in force in the Bombay Presidency (v) including Sind (w) and in Berar (x) and in the presidency town of Calcutta (y) but it is not recognized outside that town (z) It is also not recognized in the Madras Presidency (a) The meaning of the rule is that interest must not exceed the principal so if a Hindu lends Rs 500 to another Hindu and the loan is not repaid till the interest amounts to Rs 600 the lender is not entitled to recover more than Rs 500 for principal and Rs 500 for interest But the Court may under this section award further interest to the lender from the date of the suit though the aggregate interest may thereby exceed Rs 500 The reason is that the rule

through the Court (a) But though the discretion conferred upon the Courts by this section is wide it is a judicial discretion and must be exercised on fixed principles Where there are no materials before the Court on which it can exercise its discretion it is not justified in depriving a successful party of his costs (b) The following are the leading rules on the subject —

1 Costs shall follow the event —The general rule is that costs shall follow the event unless the Court for good reason otherwise orders This means that the successful party is entitled to costs unless he is guilty of misconduct or there is some other good cause for not awarding costs to him (c) The Court may not only consider the conduct of the party in the actual litigation but the matters which led up to the litigation (d) A refusal to go to arbitration is no ground for refusing costs (e) nor is the fact that the plaintiff brought his action without previous notice to the defendant (f) When an offer of compromise is made which the Court considers proper for acceptance but it refused the Court as a general rule relieves the party making the offer from payment of costs incurred after the date of the offer but an offer which the Court considers insufficient is no bar to a plaintiff s right to costs (g) In an account suit costs generally follow the result of the account unless the defendant has falsely denied his liability to account (h) But if the right to claim partition is wrongly disputed the disputing party will be made liable for costs unnecessarily incurred (i) An assignee of a decree made respondent without his consent but who actively supports the decree under appeal will be made liable for costs of the appeal but not of the lower Court (j) A successful party is not to be deprived of his costs merely because the suit proceeds ex parte (k) It has been held to be a good reason for depriving a successful respondent of his costs that the appeal was filed on the strength of a decision which was overruled after the filing of the appeal (l)

It is provided by R S C O 45 r 1 that where any action cause matter or issue is tried with a jury the costs shall follow the event unless the judge by whom such action cause matter or issue is tried or the Court shall for good cause otherwise order It has been held by the House of Lords that the expression the costs shall follow the event means that the party who on the whole succeeds in the action gets the general costs of the action but where the action involves separate issues whether arising under different causes of action or under one cause of action the word event should be read distributively and the costs of any particular issue should go to the party who succeeds upon it An issue in this sense need not go to the whole cause of action but includes any issue which has a direct and definite event in defeating the claim to judgment in whole or in part A sued B for 164*l* for the price of 34 bags of goat s hair sold to B B by his defence pleaded (1) that the goods were not according to sample and were

Costs as penalty—Costs cannot be imposed as a penalty beyond the costs of suit (k) It is not according to law to give to a party by way of damages the costs as between attorney and client of the litigation in which the damages are recovered (l) The object of awarding cost is to indemnify a party against the expense of successfully vindicating his rights in Court (m) As to compensatory costs in cases of false or vexatious claims or defences see s 35A below

Costs of and incident to suits—This expression includes not only costs of suits but costs of applications in suits If there has been an invalid reference to arbitration out of Court the Court cannot make an order for costs incurred before the arbitrator as they are not costs of the suit (n) As to costs of applications the Court may make an order directing either party to pay the costs of the other or it may make no order as to costs or it may reserve costs or make costs costs in the cause

The general order for costs of the suit does not displace a specific order for costs made on an application (o) If the order is costs reserved those costs remain to be dealt at the hearing If the order is "costs costs in the cause" the Bombay High Court at one time held that the Court had a discretion to deal with those costs in any manner it thought fit (p) in other words costs costs in the cause stood on the same footing as costs reserved except that in the case of costs costs in the cause if nothing was said about those costs in the final judgment they were taken to be included in the costs of the suit (q) But these decisions are no longer law and it has now been held that where the costs of an application are made costs in the cause the party to whom the costs of the suit are awarded is entitled as a matter of course to the costs of the application (r) If the order is costs to abide the result the Court has a discretion to apportion costs at the hearing but if the order is cost to follow the event or costs to abide and follow the result the Court has no discretion and the successful party is entitled to his costs (s)

Costs to be in the discretion of the Court—The section provides that the costs of suit and applications shall be in the discretion of the Court Such discretion must be a judicial discretion to be exercised on legal principles not by chance medley nor by caprice nor in temper (t) In the exercise of this discretion the Court is not confined to the consideration of the conduct of the parties in the actual litigation itself but may also take into consideration matters which led up to and were the occasion of that litigation (u) The discretion conferred upon the Court by this section is very wide (v) Thus the Court may order the costs to be paid by the parties in definite proportion or it may order one party to pay to the other a fixed sum in lieu of taxed costs (v) Similarly it may disallow costs to a successful plaintiff as where the rate of interest claimed by the plaintiff and allowed to him under the Usury Laws Repeal Act (x) is usurious (y) or it may make a successful plaintiff pay the whole costs of the other side ( ) It may also allow the expenses of witnesses though not summoned

through the Court (a) But though the discretion conferred upon the Courts by this section is wide it is a judicial discretion and must be exercised on fixed principles Where there are no materials before the Court on which it can exercise its discretion it is not justified in depriving a successful party of his costs (b) The following are the leading rules on the subject —

1 Costs shall follow the event —The general rule is that costs shall follow the event unless the Court for good reason otherwise orders This means that the successful party is entitled to costs unless he is guilty of misconduct or there is some other good cause for not awarding costs to him (c) The Court may not only consider the conduct of the party in the actual litigation but the matters which led up to the litigation (d) A refusal to go to arbitration is no ground for refusing costs (e) nor is the fact that the plaintiff brought his action without previous notice to the defendant (f) When an offer of compromise is made which the Court considers proper for acceptance but it refused the Court as a general rule relieves the party making the offer from payment of costs incurred after the date of the offer but an offer which the Court considers insufficient is no bar to a plaintiff s right to costs (g) In an account suit costs generally follow the result of the account unless the defendant has falsely denied his liability to account (h) But if the right to claim partition is wrongly disputed the disputing party will be made liable for costs unnecessarily incurred (i) An assignee of a decree made respondent without his consent but who actively supports the decree under appeal will be made liable for costs of the appeal but not of the lower Court (j) A successful party is not to be deprived of his costs merely because the suit proceeds ex parte (k) It has been held to be a good reason for depriving a successful respondent of his costs that the appeal was filed on the strength of a decision which was overruled after the filing of the appeal (l)

It is provided by R S C O 45 r 1 that where any action cause matter or issue is tried with a jury the costs shall follow the event unless the judge by whom such action cause matter or issue is tried or the Court shall for good cause otherwise order It has been held by the House of Lords that the expression the costs shall follow the event means that the party who on the whole succeeds in the action gets the general costs of the action but where the action involves separate issues whether arising under different causes of action or under one cause of action the word event should be read distributively and the costs of any particular issue should go to the party who succeeds upon it An issue in this sense need not go to the whole cause of action but includes any issue which has a direct and definite event in defeating the claim to judgment in whole or in part A sued B for 164*l* for the price of 34 bags of goat s hair sold to B B by his defence pleaded (1) that the goods were not according to sample and were

3 The fact that a successful defendant has set up the Gaming Act as an answer to the plaintiff's claim is not good cause for depriving him of his costs (o) Nor is the fact that he has pleaded the Statute of Limitations (p)

4 If a plaintiff substantially succeeds he is entitled to his costs though he may not have get the precise form of relief he wanted (q) and even though the damages awarded to him have been reduced (r)

5 If a plaintiff recovers a less (but not a trifling less) amount than he claimed in the plaint his costs should be apportioned according to the amount recovered and not to the sum claimed ( ) As to the rule in Privy Council see the undernoted case (t) The proper mode of apportionment is to calculate the amount of the costs of the suit as laid and then divide the entire sum between the parties according as they have respectively succeeded or failed (u)

6 Where a plaintiff succeeds on part of his claim but fails on the most important and expensive heads of controversy he may be made to pay the whole costs of the suit to the defendant (v)

7 Everything which increases the litigation and the costs and which places on the defendant a burden which he ought not to bear in the litigation is a perfectly good cause for depriving the plaintiff of costs (w)

9 A person wrongfully made a party should get his costs (y)

10 Where both the parties advance pleas far in excess of their legal rights each party will be made to bear his own costs ( )

11 Separate costs should not be allowed to defendants if the defence is common to all or their interests are the same (a)

12 Where two defendants join in defending an action and judgment is entered for one and against the other the successful defendant is prima facie

13 Where two plaintiffs join in one action claiming for separate and distinct causes of action and judgment is entered in favour of one plaintiff and against the other the successful plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the whole of his general costs of the action and the defendant is entitled to recover from the unsuccessful plaintiff the costs occasioned by his joinder as plaintiff (c)

No separate suit for costs.—Where a Court has jurisdiction to deal with the question of costs no separate suit will lie to recover costs but where it has no jurisdiction to order costs and costs are incurred they may be made the subject of consideration as to damages in a subsequent suit (n).

Sub section (2).—If the Court does not abide by the rule that costs should follow the event it should record its reasons (o).

Sub section (3).—The Court may allow interest on costs but if the decree is silent as to interest it cannot be given in execution (p).

Whether an appeal lies for costs only.—Decisions of a Court of law fall into three classes namely:—

I Decrees [Every decree is appealable (s. 96).]

II Appealable orders [s. 104]

III Non appealable orders [s. 105]

I It is settled that an appeal lies for costs only when the costs are awarded by a decree if the order as to costs involve a question of principle but it is not settled whether such an appeal lies if no question of principle is involved.—A decree contains—

(1) a decision on the rights of parties hereinafter called item No. 1—and

(2) a direction as to costs hereinafter called item No. 2.

A party while appealing from item No. 1 or any part thereof may appeal also from item No. 2. He may at the hearing abandon the appeal from item No. 1 and may proceed with the appeal from item No. 2 (q). But can he appeal from item No. 2 alone without appealing from item No. 1? In other words does an appeal lie on a matter of costs only?

All the High Courts are agreed that such an appeal does lie—

(1) where the order as to costs involves a matter of principle (r) as where a formal party to a suit against whom no relief is claimed is made to pay the costs of the suit (s); or

(2) where there has been no real exercise of discretion in making the order as to costs. This may happen when a successful party is deprived of his costs (t) or is made to pay the costs of the losing party (u). If the discretion was exercised in fact the appellate Court would not interfere merely because it would itself have exercised the discretion differently (v).

(3) where the order as to costs proceeds upon a misapprehension of fact or law (w).

For brevity's sake we shall describe all the three cases as cases where a question of principle is involved. We may therefore say that it is settled law that an appeal lies for costs only where the order as to costs involves a question of principle. But it is not settled whether an appeal lies for costs only where no question of principle is involved. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that no appeal lies on a question of costs unless there is a question of principle involved (x) On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Bombay that an appeal will lie for costs only whether the order as to costs involves a question of principle or not (y) The ground of the Bombay decisions is that every decree being appealable any part of it is appealable though it be the part relating to costs whether there is a matter of principle involved or not But even according to the Bombay decisions though an appeal may lie for costs only the appellate Court will not as a rule vary or set aside the order of the lower Court as to costs unless there is a principle involved and the principle has been violated

Does a second appeal lie on a matter of costs only? It has been held that it does provided there is a question of law or principle involved ( ) see s 100 cl (a)

II Appeal from a direction as to costs contained in an appealable order — The law as to appeal from a decision as to costs contained in an order (as distinguished from a decree) is that if the order is itself appealable an appeal will lie from that part of the order which relates to costs (a) But no second appeal lies on a matter of costs awarded by an appealable order for no second appeal lies from any order passed in appeal under s 104 see s 104 (2)

III Appeal from a direction as to costs contained in a non appealable order —Since no appeal lies from a non appealable order no appeal can lie from a direction as to costs contained in such order Thus if an order is made adjourning the hearing of a suit and one of the parties is directed to pay the costs occasioned by the application for adjournment he cannot appeal from the direction as to costs for an order adjourning the hearing of a suit is not an appealable order it not being included in s 104 (1) below (b)

Letters Patent appeal —An order as to costs is not a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent and is not appealable as such (c)

Costs against Secretary of State —The Secretary of State is in an unsuccessful litigation liable to pay costs like any other unsuccessful party (d)

Suit for contribution towards costs — A defendant is not entitled as against a co defendant to contribution in respect of costs to which both are liable unless there be some equity existing between him and the co defendant (e)

Review of taxation —On a review of taxation the decision of the taxing master is not absolutely final even on a question of quantum The Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion of the taxing master if he has acted upon any wrong principle or applied any wrong consideration (f)

35A (1) If in any suit or other proceeding not being an appeal any party objects to the claim or defence on the ground that the claim or defence or any part of it is as against the objector, false or vexatious to the knowledge of the party by whom it has been put forward and if thereafter as against the

objector, such claim or defence is disallowed, abandoned or withdrawn in whole or in part, the Court, if the objection has been taken at the earliest opportunity and if it is satisfied of the justice thereof, may, after recording its reasons for holding such claim or defence to be false or vexatious, make an order for the payment to the objector, by the party by whom such claim or defence has been put forward, of costs by way of compensation

(2) No Court shall make any such order for the payment of an amount exceeding one thousand rupees or exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction, whichever amount is less

Provided that where the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of any Court exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 1887, and not being a Court constituted under that Act, are less than two hundred and fifty rupees the High Court may empower such Court to award as costs under this section any amount not exceeding two hundred and fifty rupees and not exceeding those limits by more than one hundred rupees

Provided further that the High Court may limit the amount which any Court or class of Courts is empowered to award as costs under this section

(3) No person against whom an order has been made under this section shall by reason thereof be exempted from any criminal liability in respect of any claim or defence made by him

(4) The amount of any compensation awarded under this section in respect of a false or vexatious claim or defence shall be taken into account in any subsequent suit for damages or compensation in respect of such claim or defence

This section was added into the Code by Act 9 of 1922 The section does not come into operation until the Local Government has with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council by notification in the local Official Gazette directed that the Act shall come into force in the Province on such date as may be specified in the notification

The section provides for payment of costs by way of compensation in cases of false or vexatious claims and defences See notes to s 35 Costs as penalty on p 128 above

An order awarding compensation under this section is appealable under section 104 (ff) But an appellate Court cannot make an order when the original Court has refused to do so See proviso to O 41 r 33

PART II

GENERAL

36 [New] The provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decrees shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to the execution of orders

Application to orders

Execution—Execution is the enforcement by the process of the Court of its own decrees The main rule of procedure are enacted in this part of the Code and minor rules are relegated to O 21 These provisions apply to decrees which are capable of execution There is no question of execution in regard to decrees that are purely declaratory

What decrees may be executed—(i) The decree to be executed is the decree of the Court of first instance until appeal and after that the decree of the Court of last instance— When the Appellate Court makes a decree the decree of the original Court is merged in that of the superior Court and it is the latter decree alone that can be executed (g) If the Appellate Court rejects the appeal under O 41 r 10 its order is not a decree (h) n[illegible] if it dismisses the appeal for default of appearance (i) or want of prosecution (j) n[illegible] the appeal abates (k) or is withdrawn (l) In all these cases there is no decree of th[illegible] Appellate Court and the decree to be executed is that of the original Court This w[illegible] also seem to be the case when the appeal is summarily dismissed without notice to [illegible] respondent but the cases are conflicting (m) But when the appeal is heard O 41 r [illegible] requires that the judgment should confirm vary or reverse the decree from wh[illegible] appeal is preferred (n) and the decree capable of execution is the decree of th[illegible] Appeal (o) When the decree of the Court of first instance is confirmed by th[illegible] Court and the latter decree by Privy Council the decree capable of executi[illegible] decree of Privy Council (p)

The question which decree should be executed arises in the following cases —

(a) Amendment—The only decree that can be amended is the decr[illegible] to be executed If the Court of appeal confirms varies or [illegible] decree of the lower Court the decree of the Appellate Court is th[illegible] that can be amended (q)

(b) Limitation —Time runs from the date of the decree capable of execution and that is the decree of the Appellate Court superseding that of the Court of first instance (r) and it has been held that this is so even if the Appellate Court holds that no appeal lies (s)

(c) Time for payment fixed by the decree —When a time is fixed for payment by the decree of the lower Court as in a decree for redemption and the decree is affirmed on appeal the decree capable of execution is the appellate decree Nevertheless the time for the performance of the condition is not extended (t) Thus in Chandyamlal v. Ram Narain (u) the suit was on a bond in which interest was stipulated at 30 per cent and the decree of the first Court said that if the defendant deposited the money within three months of date of decree he would be liable only for interest at 12 per cent This was confirmed on appeal by the High Court and Privy Council but the defendant was not allowed an extension of time till three months after the decree of Privy Council On the other hand in Noor Ali v. Koni Meah (v) a rent decree rendered a tenant liable to ejectment if the rent was not paid within 15 days This was confirmed on appeal and it was held that he would be protected from ejectment if he paid within 15 days of the appellate decree In a more recent case Mookerjee J said that the balance of judicial opinion is in favour of the view that when time is fixed by the decree of the lower Court for the payment of money and the decree is confirmed on appeal time runs from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court (w) It is submitted that the correct view is that the appellate decree not being complete in itself must be construed with reference to the decree of the lower Court and that time is not extended The Appellate Court can however by its decree alter the time of payment and should so frame its decree as to make it clear whether or not it intends to do so (x)

(d) Mesne profits —Mesne profits can be ordered from the date of institution of the suit until the expiry of three years from the date of the decree This means the decree capable of execution so that if the decree is confirmed on appeal three years run from the date of the appellate decree (y) But though the decree to be executed is the appellate decree yet the terms of it must be ascertained by reference to the decree of the lower Court Therefore when the original decree gave mesne profits from the date of its decree till the date of delivery of possession and was affirmed by Privy Council and plaintiff got possession subsequent to the latter decree he was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the original decree ( )

(n) The decree to be executed must be a subsisting decree —A obtains a decree against B and C B subsequently sues to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud and the decree is set aside as against him A cannot execute the decree as against B for the decree does not subsist as against B But he may execute the decree as against C for the decree is a subsisting decree as against C (a)

(iii) The decree to be executed must be a decree of which execution is not barred by the law of limitation —See Limitation Act 1908 arts 182 and 183 and see notes to s 48 below

Execution of orders —The term order is defined in s 2 cl 14 as the formal expression of any decision of a civil Court which is not a decree An order under s 34 of the Guardians and Wards Act 8 of 1890 directing a guardian to pay a sum of money out of his ward s estate for the marriage expen es of a per on dependent on his ward is not an order within the meaning of s 2 cl 14 and it cannot be enforced against the ward after he has attained majority and the guardian has been discharged (b) But an order made after the dismis al of a partition suit directing the plaintiff to deposit in Court a certain sum of money as remuneration for work done by the Commi sioners of partition is an order within the meaning of s 2 cl 14 and it may be executed as a decree (c)

Merger of decree —As to merger of decree of the first Court in the decree of the Appellate Court see Cajraj v Swami Nath (d) where all the ca es are reviewed See also notes to O 9 r 13 Hearing of application after di posal of appeal

37 [S 649 2nd para] The expression "Court which passed a decree," or words to that effect, shall, in relation to the execution of decrees, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, be deemed to include,—

Definition of Court which passed a decree

(a) where the decree to be executed has been passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the Court of first instance, and

(b) where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it, the Court which, if the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted at the time of making the application for the execution of the decree would have jurisdiction to try such suit

Changes introduced in the section —This ection differs from the corresponding section 649 of the Code of 1882 in that the expression the Court of first instance in clause (a) has been substituted for the expression the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred As to the effect of thi alteration see notes below

Court which passed a decree —Section 38 indicates the Courts by which decrees may be executed A decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution It may also be executed by the Court to which it is transferred under s 24 above (e) The present section explains the meaning of the expre sion Court which pa ed a decree

The expression Court which passed a decree includes not only the Court which actually passed the decree but the Courts mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of the present section The following rules are deducible from this section and section 38 —

1 Where the decree to be executed is a decree of a Court of first instance the proper Court to execute it is the Court of first instance

2 Where the decree to be executed is a decree passed by a Court of first appeal the proper Court to execute it is also the Court of first instance

3 Where the decree to be executed is a decree passed by the High Court in second appeal then also the proper Court to execute it is the Court of first instance Thus where a suit is instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge and an appeal from the decree is preferred to the District Court and a second appeal is preferred to the High Court the proper Court to execute the decree of the High Court is the Court of first instance that is the Court of the Subordinate Judge Under the Code of 1882 s 649 para 2 of which the present section is in the main a reproduction the Court to execute the decree would be the District Court the expression there used being the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred As a matter of practice however the Court of intermediate appeal never executed decrees passed by the High Court in second appeal The substitution of the expression Court of first instance in clause (a) of the present section for the expression Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts when the present Code was enacted

4 Where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist the only Court that can execute the decree is the Court which at the time of making the application for execution would have jurisdiction to try the suit in which the decree was passed A Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes ceases to exist as a Court of Small Causes when those powers are withdrawn (f) A Court does not cease to exist merely because its head quarters are removed to another place or because the local limits (g) or the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction (h) are altered

5 Where the Court of first instance has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree.—In this case the Court of execution is the Court which at the time of the application would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit in which the decree was passed But the jurisdiction of the original Court is not entirely excluded A decree is passed by Court X directing the sale of immovable property within its jurisdiction After the decree and before the application in execution for sale the property directed to be sold is transferred by the Local Government s notification from the jurisdiction of Court X to the jurisdiction of Court Y Has Court X jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution and to order the sale of the property? According to the Calcutta decisions both Court X and Court Y have jurisdiction to entertain the application but if the application is made to Court X it should not itself make an order for the sale of the property but transfer the application to Court Y for making and executing the order for sale (i) According to an earlier decision of the Madras High Court

Court X has jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution but the question whether it could itself order the sale of the property was not decided (j) In a later Madras case the opinion was expressed that Court X has no jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution (k) but this view was overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court the Full Bench taking the same view as the Calcutta High Court Wallis C J observed that the power of sending the decree to another Court was sufficient to meet the case The learned C J construed sec 150 as conferring upon the Court of the transferred area jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution but was of opinion that the section could not be read as taking away from the Court which passed the decree the power which it had according to the unbroken current of authorities of entertaining the application (l) But a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution has no jurisdiction to order either the attachment or sale of immovable property if at the time of the order such Court had no territorial jurisdiction over the property (m)

Cl (b) Ceased to have jurisdiction to execute —A Court does not cease to have jurisdiction to execute its decree because it is abolished and re-established (n) or merely because its business is transferred by the District Judge under the Act constituting it to another Court (o) or because the area in which the judgment debtor resides is transferred from its jurisdiction to that of another Court (p) Where an order was made by the High Court of Calcutta rejecting a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council and directing the petitioner to pay the respondent s costs but the order was silent as to the Court by which it was to be executed it was held that the circumstance that the High Court on its appellate side does not in practice execute its own decrees and orders did not make that Court as regards the execution of the order a Court that had ceased to have jurisdiction to execute its decree (q) [O 45 r 15] Nor does a Court which passed a decree cease to have jurisdiction to execute it because after the passing of the decree a party [e g Court of Wards] is added in execution who had he been a party when the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted would have deprived the Court of its jurisdiction (r) In a recent Madras case (s) the Court said with reference to cl (b) of the section In fact this portion of section 37 of the Civil Procedure Code clearly has reference to transfers of territorial jurisdiction from one Court to another In applying this section the nature of the cause which put an end to the jurisdiction of a Court is immaterial (t)

Court which passed a decree —See notes to s 37 on p 137 under the same heading

Court to which it is sent for execution —This would be under sections 39 and 40

Jurisdiction of Court executing a decree —The following are the leading rules relating to the jurisdiction of Courts executing decrees —

RULE I —No court can execute a decree in which the subject matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property situate entirely outside the local limits of its jurisdiction —Territorial jurisdiction in other words is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree (u)

Exception I —The Court which passed a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage of immovable property has power in execution of its decree to order the sale of such property though it may be situate beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction — A sues B in a Court in district X on a mortgage of two properties one situate in district X and the other in district Y A decree is passed for the sale of both the properties The Court in district X having jurisdiction to entertain the suit in respect of the property situate in district Y (s 17) has also jurisdiction to sell that property in execution of its decree though the property is situate beyond its jurisdiction It is not bound to send the decree for execution as regards the property in district Y to the Court of that district under s 39 (c) but it may do so (v) In the latter case the decree as respects the property in district Y may be executed by the Court of district Y (w) See also notes to s 17

Exception II —Where after the passing of a decree in a suit for the enforcement of a mortgage the whole of the immovable property included therein falls by transfer of jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of another Court the application for execution of the decree according to the Calcutta rulings may be made either to the Court which passed the decree (though the property is no longer within its jurisdiction) or to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the immovable property falls by such transfer but where the application is made to the former Court it should not itself order the property to be sold but should transfer it to the latter Court for passing and executing the order for sale (x) See note to s 37 Court which passed the decree rule 5 p 137

Exception III —The salary of the public officer or of a servant of a Railway company or local authority may be attached by a Court though the disbursing officer may not be within the local limits of the Court s jurisdiction See O 21 r 48 and notes thereto

RULE II —Where a decree has been passed for the payment of money and the decree holder applies for attachment and sale of immovable property (belonging to the judgment debtor) which forms one estate of part whereof is situated within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree and part beyond such limits the Court executing the decree has the power to attach and sell the whole estate including the portion situated beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction See O 21 r 3 and notes thereto

RULE III —Whether a Court to which a decree has been sent for execution under s 39 has jurisdiction to execute the decree if the amount of the decree exceeds the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court? There is a conflict of decision as to whether the Court of execution is restricted to the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction To put the question in a concrete form if a decree for Rs 7 000 is sent for execution to a Court whose pecuniary jurisdiction does not exceed Rs 5 000 can the latter Court execute the decree? Yes according to Madras (y) No according to Calcutta (z) Bombay (a) and Patna (b)

RULE IX —Where the decree sought to be executed is passed by a competent Court the Court will not be deemed to be incompetent to execute the decree merely because by reason of the amount of interest or mesne profits ascertained for a period subsequent to the institution of the suit the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are exceeded —A obtains a decree against B for Rs 4 000 and interest in a Court of which the pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs 5 000 A then applies to the Court for execution At the date of the application for execution the total amount of the decree by reason of accumulation of interest exceed Rs 5 000 The Court has jurisdiction to execute the decree All the Courts are agreed on the point (c) for if the Court had jurisdiction at the time of the institution of the suit incidental causes such as the accumulation of profits or interest or a rise in price will not affect its jurisdiction See notes to s 6

RULE X —A Court to which execution of a decree is transferred has no jurisdiction to order either the attachment or sale of immovable property in execution if at the time of the order such Court had no territorial jurisdiction over the property (d)

Powers of executing Court—Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree—A Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree It must take the decree as it stands (e) It has no power to entertain any objection as to the validity of the decree (f) or that it was obtained by fraud (g) or as to the legality or correctness of the decree (h) e g an objection that the decree sought to be executed was passed against a wrong person (i) or that it was passed against a lunatic or a minor not properly represented (j) The reason is that a decree though it may not be according to law is binding and conclusive between the parties until it is set aside either in appeal or revision (k) For the same reason the Court executing a decree cannot alter vary or add to the terms of the decree (l) even by consent of parties unless it is in adjustment of the decree (m) But a decree passed against a person who was dead at the date of the decree without bringing his legal representative on the record is a nullity and it cannot be executed against his estate (n) As to whether a decree passed by a Court without jurisdiction can be executed see notes to s 21 section 21 and execution proceedings As to the powers of a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution see notes to s 42 and O 21 r 7

Construction of decree by executing Court—If the decree is free from ambiguity the Court of execution is bound to execute it whether it be right or wrong (o) But though a Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree it is quite competent to construe the decree where the terms of the decree are ambiguous and to ascertain its precise meaning for unless this is done the decree cannot be executed The construction of a decree must be governed by the pleadings and the judgment (p) And the Court should if possible put such a construction upon the decree as would make it in accordance with law (q) When a particular construction has been put upon a decree in a former execution proceedings it is not open to the Court in a subsequent application to treat that construction as erroneous See note to s 11 Orders in execution proceedings on p 77 above

39 [S 223, 2nd and 3rd paras] (1) The Court which passed a decree may, on the application of the decree holder send it for execution to another Court,—

Transfer of decree

(a) if the person against whom the decree is passed actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or

(b) if such person has not property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree sufficient to satisfy such decree and has property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or

(c) if the decree directs the sale or delivery of immovable property situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it, or

(d) if the Court which passed the decree considers for any other reason, which it shall record in writing, that the decree should be executed by such other Court

(2) The Court which passed a decree may of its own motion send it for execution to any subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction

Alterations in the section —The words of competent jurisdiction in sub s (2) are new

The Court which passed a decree —See notes to s 37 under the same head on p 137 above

Another Court —The Court to which the decree is sent for execution must be a Court in British India (r) Decrees cannot be sent to Courts not in British India except in the case for which section 45 makes special provision (s)

Jurisdiction of Court executing a decree —See notes under the same head to s 38 on p 140 above

Transfer of decree for execution —A decree passed by one Court may be sent for execution to another Court either on the application of the decree holder on one of the grounds stated in this section or by the Court which passed it of its own motion When a decree is sent by the Court which passed it for execution to another Court the Court sending the decree must send a copy of the decree and other documents mentioned in O 21 r 6 to the Court by which the decree is to be executed The latter Court must on receiving the copy of the decree and the other documents cause the same to be filed (O 21 r 7) An application for transfer of a decree is not an application for execution (t) The decree holder who has applied for execution to the Court which passed the decree need not make a fresh application to the transferee Court (u) When he has not applied to the Court which passed the decree he must apply to the transferee Court for execution (O 21 r 10) The Court executing a decree sent to it for execution has the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself (s 42)

Clause (a) —This clause provides for transfer of the decree if the judgment-debtor is resident in the jurisdiction of another Court The power of the Court under this clause to transfer a decree is not confined to the case where execution is sought against the person of the judgment debtor The decree holder is not bound to state in the application for transfer the mode in which the decree is to be executed If he satisfies the Court that the judgment debtor resides in the jurisdiction of another Court he may ask for transferring the decree to that Court without stating anything more in his application (v) If the judgment debtor s garnishee is resident in another jurisdiction the decree must be transferred there to serve a prohibitory order upon him (w)

Clause (b) —If the judgment debtor s property is out of jurisdiction the Court which passed the decree cannot attach it but must transfer the decree to the Court within whose local limits the property may be (x)

Clause (c) —As stated in rule 1 under sec 38 territorial jurisdiction is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree If the decree directs the sale of immovable property within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of another Court it must be sent to that Court for execution There is an exception to this in the case of a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage see exception 1 to Rule 1 under sec 38 above As to such decrees the Court may either execute the decree itself or to send it for execution to the Court having local jurisdiction (y)

Clause (d)—In a Bombay case the Court expressed a doubt whether clause (d) of this section enabled a Subordinate Judge to transfer a decree for execution to a Small Cause Court where the property attached was within the local jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge ( )

A decree may be executed simultaneously in more places than one—A Court passing a decree has the power to send its decree to more Courts than one for concurrent execution But this power should be sparingly exercised and when exercised it would be in many cases proper to impose terms on the decree holder that he should not proceed to a sale under all the attachments at once (a)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for the transfer of a decree The reason is that questions relating to the transfer of decrees are questions relating to execution within the meaning of s 47 (b) See s 2 (2)

Madras Village Munsif s Court Act I of 1889—This Act is a complete code of procedure by itself and the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be imported into it except to the extent provided by the Amending Act 2 of 1920 (c)

Award—An award filed under s 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act 9 of 1899 is enforceable under s 15 of the Act as if it were a decree of the Court It may therefore be transferred for execution as a decree under this section to another Court (d) So also an award made under rules framed under s 43 of the Co operative Societies Act 2 of 1912 (e)

the decree rests in the transferee Court (g) The Oudh Court has held that though the transferee Court ceases after certification to have jurisdiction further to execute the decree it has power to decide an objection taken before it in respect of anything done in the course of the execution proceedings taken by it (h) Mere notification of payments made on account of the decree to the Court which passed the decree does not amount to a certification under this section (i) In a Bombay case it was said that the section only means that the Court of execution should keep the Court which passed the decree informed of what has happened in the execution (j) This is incorrect for the certificate is a very important step it is a formality which has the effect of determining the jurisdiction of the transferee Court and is only sent after complete failure to execute or after the Court has executed as far as it can (k)

42 [S 228] The Court executing a decree sent to it shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself All persons disobeying or obstructing the execution of the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same manner as if it had passed the decree And its order in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself

Powers of Court executing transferred decree

Powers of Court executing transferred decree —A Court executing a transferred decree has the same powers as if the decree had been passed by itself Its powers are therefore limited in the same way as they would be if it were its own decree See note under sec 38

Powers of transferee Court in executing decree —The transferee Court can decide all questions arising in execution as if it were its own decree (l) but it cannot entertain an objection to the legality or correctness of the decree (m) or that the decree is defective (n) or that it was obtained by fraud (o) or that it directs a sale of property which is not saleable under sec 60 of the Code (p) It cannot alter vary or add to the terms of the decree it cannot allow future interest where none is allowed by the decree (q) Nor can it question the right of a transferee of a decree whose name is on the record as the person entitled to execution (r)

The transferee Court has no power to question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree (s) There were conflicting decisions on this point which has now been settled by the omission from O 21 r 7 of the words or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it which occurred in sec 223 of the Code of 1882

If the Court which passed the decree has made an order for execution the transferee Court cannot question the legality or propriety of that order (t) It cannot therefore entertain an objection that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation at the time when the order for execution was made (u) but if the transferor Court which passed the decree has made no order for execution the Court of execution has power to decide whether execution is barred by limitation (v) or it may stay execution and leave the objection to be decided by the Court which passed the decree (w)

The Court which passed the decree does not by reason of the transfer altogether surrender its control over the execution proceeding It has power under O 21 r 26 to make an order for stay of execution It may withdraw the execution by calling back the decree (x) The Rangoon High Court has held that without withdrawing the decree it may make an order for simultaneous execution by another Court (y) Again it has jurisdiction to decide an objection as to limitation if referred to it by the transferee Court (z) The transferee Court has jurisdiction limited to the execution of the decree transferred to it and it cannot transfer it to another Court (a) Successive execution applications must be made to it (b) and its jurisdiction continues until (1) the execution proceeding is withdrawn from it or (2) it has certified under section 41 execution or execution as far as possible or failure to execute (c) I has been said that till then it is the only Court which has seizin of the execution proceeding and that an execution application made to the Court which passed the decree is not a step in aid of execution so as to save limitation (d) But it is submitted that this is not correct for as already stated the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree is not altogether excluded If the decree is assigned after the transfer the assignee must apply for execution to the original Court (e) If after a decree has been transferred to another Court for execution the judgment debtor dies the Court which made the decree is by s 50 of the Code of Civil Procedure the proper Court to order that the execution shall proceed against his representative But that Court has not exclusive jurisdiction if the Court to which the execution has been transferred makes the order that is merely an irregularity in procedure which can be waived Where the representative having received notice has not objected to that Court making the order and by subsequent applications to it has obtained postponements of the sale he is bound by the order (f)

The mere striking off or rejection of an execution application for some informality in the application does not terminate the jurisdiction of the transferee Court to execute the decree nor render it necessary to send any certificate to the transferor Court (g) On the other hand if the application has been dismissed for non prosecution and a certificate of failure of execution has been sent the only Court which can

The Court is not bound to certify failure of execution if the decree holder wishes to make another attempt (i)

43 [S 229] Any decree passed by a Civil Court established in any part of British India to which the provisions relating to execution do not extend or by any Court established or continued by the authority of the Governor General in Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State may, if it cannot be executed within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed, be executed in manner herein provided within the jurisdiction of any Court in British India

Execution of decrees passed by British Courts in places to which this part does not extend or in foreign territory

This section applies to British Courts in Scheduled Districts and to British Courts in foreign territory Such Courts may transfer their decrees for execution to Courts in British India to which the Code applies The Court of the Political Agent Sikkim is a Court referred to in the section and it may transfer its decrees for execution to the Subordinate Judge at Darjeeling (j) The application for execution of a transferred decree must shew that the Court is one referred to in this section (k)

44 [S 229 B] The Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare that the decrees of any Civil or Revenue Courts situate in the territories of any Native Prince or State in alliance with His Majesty and not established or continued by the authority of the Governor General in Council, or any class of such decrees may be executed in British India as if they had been passed by the Courts of British India

Execution of decrees passed by Courts of Native States

By notification —For notifications issued under this section see General Statutory Rules and Orders Vol I pp 622 623 and Vol IV pp 682 683 and 685

Decree of Courts of Native States —The section uses the words "Native Prince or State" which are more restrictive than the words "foreign Prince or State" in section 43 and therefore does not refer to foreign Courts outside India But the section does not take Native State decrees out of the category of foreign decrees (l) It empowers a Court in British India to execute a decree transferred from a notified Native State Court but the British Court is not precluded from refusing execution on the ground that the Native State Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree (m) or that the decree was obtained by fraud (n) The judgment-debtor will have the same defences as if he were sued on the foreign judgment (o) The section was merely intended to alter the procedure for enforcing Native State decrees (p) and must be construed as subject to the same limitations as are contained in s 13

Limitation for execution of Native State decree —The period of limitation for execution of a decree of a Court of a Native State transferred for execution to a Court of British India is not the period prescribed by the law of that State but that prescribed by the law of British India that is three years from the date of the decree [Limitation Act 1908 Sch I art 182] (q)

Execution of decrees foreign territory

45 [S 229 A] So much of the foregoing sections of this Part as empowers a Court to send a decree for execution to another Court shall be construed as empowering a Court in British India to send a decree for execution to any Court established or continued by the authority of the Governor General in Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State to which the Governor General in Council has, by notification in the Gazette of India, declared this section to apply

Court established or continued in Native States —For a list of such Courts see General Statutory Rules and Orders Vol I pp 638 642 and Vol IV p 683

Execution of British decrees in foreign territory —This is the only section which refers to the execution in foreign territory of decrees of Courts in British India Such decrees can only be executed in foreign territory by British Courts established there and empowered by notification under this section It is only when the Court in foreign territory is a Court established and continued by the Governor General in Council in the extraterritorial jurisdiction that there is power to provide for the transfer to them of decrees of British Indian Courts for execution for both in Native States and in other foreign territory execution would be pursuant to the legislative authority or sovereign powe f such State or territory (r)

The two previous sections dealt with the converse case of the execution by British Courts of decrees of—

(a) British Courts in Scheduled Districts s c 43

(b) British Courts in foreign territory including Native States sec 43

(c) Foreign Courts in Native States sec 44

All other decrees of foreign Courts i e Courts outside India and Courts of Native States not notified under sec 44 must be enforced by suit But as regards foreign Courts in Native States a reciprocal arrangement is sometimes effected by treaty for the execution of their decrees in our Courts and our decrees in their Courts Such an arrangement was made with Travancore in 1887 and is referred to in the undermentioned case (s)

46 [New] (1) Upon the application of the decree holder the Court which passed the decree may, whenever it thinks fit, issue a precept to any other Court which would be competent to execute such decree to attach any property belonging to the judgment debtor and specified in the precept

Precepts

(2) The Court to which a precept is sent shall proceed to attach the property in the manner prescribed in regard to the attachment of property in execution of a decree

Provided that no attachment under a precept shall continue for more than two months unless the period of attachment is extended by an order of the Court which passed the decree or unless before the determination of such attachment the decree has been transferred to the Court by which the attachment has been made and the decree holder has applied for an order for the sale of such property

Attachment under precept —It was at one time proposed to do away with the system of execution by transfer of decree under sections 30 to 42 and to substitute another system whereby the Court which passed the decree retained complete control and issued precepts to one or more other Courts to carry on execution under its direction This proposal was abandoned and the system of execution by transfer of decree retained But the proposal led to the insertion of the present section by which the Court which passed the decree can issue a precept of attachment to enure for two months or pending transfer of decree and application for execution The object of a precept is to enable a decree holder to obtain an interim attachment where there is ground to apprehend that he may otherwise be deprived of the fruits of his decree No such attachment however can continue for more than two months except in the two cases mentioned in the section The effect of the proviso is to render re attachment unnecessary

The Court to which a precept is issued derives its authority from that precept and has no power to do anything not authorized thereby but it must be presumed to have inherent powers to deal with all matters that may incidentally arise in connection with proceedings for attachment It cannot therefore be said that the Court to which a precept is issued has no jurisdiction to stay execution if the judgment debtor deposits the decretal amount in Court or gives security for payment of the amount (t)

Questions to be determined by Court executing decree

47 [S 224] (1) All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit

Questions to be determined by the Court executing decree

(t) [illegible] v Dina Nath (1926) 8 Lah L J 164 94 I C 119 ('26) A L 4 3

(2) The Court may, subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional court fees

(3) Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the representative of a party, such question shall, for the purposes of this section, be determined by the Court

Explanation—For the purposes of this section, a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed, are parties to the suit

Changes introduced in the section—This section corresponds with s 244 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

1 Sub clauses (a) and (b) of s 244 which provided for the determination of questions regarding the amount of mesne profits and interest in execution proceedings have been omitted as it was deemed expedient that such questions should be determined by the decree and not in execution See O 20 r 12

2 The words or to the stay of execution thereof which occurred in s 244 after the words execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree have been omitted in the present section As to the effect of the omission see notes Stay of execution

3 Sub section (2) of the present section is new It gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts under the Code of 1882 See notes below under the head Sub section (2) Court may treat suit as an application

4 Under the old s 244 the Court executing the decree had the option when a question arose as to who was the representative of a party itself to determine the question or to stay execution until it was determined by a separate suit Sub section (3) of the present section renders it obligatory on the executing Court itself to determine the question as it was considered inexpedient that separate suits should be instituted for the decision of such question See notes below under the head ' Sub-section (3) Inquiry as to who is the representative of a party

5 The Explanation sets at rest a conflict of judicial decisions noted below in the commentary under the head Explanation to the section and parties to suit

To what decrees section applies—This section has no application when the decree is a nullity for such a decree is not a decree at all If the defendant dies after the hearing of the suit is concluded and judgment reserved the decree is binding on his estate see O 21 r 6 This is on the principle that actus curiae nemini facit injuriam and judgment is entered up nunc pro tunc (u) But if the defendant dies before the hearing is concluded and the decree is passed without bringing his legal representative on the record the decree is a nullity and incapable of execution (v)

If application is made to execute the decree against the legal representative he can challenge the validity of the decree in execution proceedings (w) and if his property is taken in execution he can sue to recover it (x) Nor does the section refer to declaratory decrees for the rights declared by such decrees can only be enforced by suit If a decree has b en construed as a declaratory decree creating new rights and obligations section 47 does not apply and it can only be enforced by suit (y) The section refers only to decrees which are capable of execution

Section to be construed liberally—It is settled law in India that no action will lie on an executable judgment for on such a judgment the only remedy is execution (z) The section is so framed as to prohibit in a separate suit any relief being granted which will interfere with the conduct of execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree (a) The main principle underlying this section is that matters relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of a decree and arising between the parties or their repre entatives hould be determined in the execution proceeding and not by separate suit It matters not whether such question arises before or after the decree has been executed (b) The section provides a cheap and expeditious procedure for the trial of such questions without recourse to a separate suit The Privy Council referring to the corre ponding section of the Act of 1861 said this enactment was undoubtedly passed for the beneficial purpose of checking needless litigation and their Lordships do not desire to limit its operation (c) Again with reference to the Code of 1882 the Privy Council stre sed the same point in Prosunno Kumar v Kali Das (d) and said It is of the utmo t importance that all objections to execution should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible Their Lord hips are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244 Following these deci ions a wide and liberal construction has always been placed upon the section (e)

On the other hand the condition which bar a separate suit must not be lost sight of These conditions refer (1) to the questions and (2) to the parties The questions must relate to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree The parties must be the parties to the suit or their representatives If both these conditions are fulfilled the question must be determined in execution proceedings and a separate suit will be barred

And not by a suit —whether objection to execution can be raised by way of defence—The section provides that all que tions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the execution di charge or satisfaction of the decree shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit The words and not by a eparate suit have given ri e to the question whether if a party to a suit fail to rai e an objection to execution in execution proceedings he may rai e it by way of defence in a suit brought against him In Bhiram

Ma v. Cop Kanth (e1) the High Court of Calcutta held that he is entitled to raise the objection by way of defence. The ground of the decision was that what is prohibited by the section is the determination of questions relating to execution by a separate suit and not their determination in a separate suit. Bharam ... case and the Calcutta cases which fall with it have been overruled by a recent Full Bench ruling of the same High Court in Laksh in Chandra v. I an Lat Mondal (e). The grounds of the decision are (1) that the words "shall be determined by the Court executing the decree" amount to a direction that the executing Court alone shall determine questions relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree, thus giving the Court executing the decree exclusive jurisdiction to determine such questions and (2) that the prohibition conveyed by the words "and not by a separate suit" is a provision in aid of the previous direction. In the Full Bench case the decree was satisfied by an adjustment but the adjustment was not certified to the Court as required by O. r. 2. The decree holder applied for execution and the judgment debtor's property was put up for sale and purchased by the decree holder himself. The decree holder afterwards sued the judgment debtor for possession. The judgment debtor contended that the decree had been satisfied and that the sale was therefore fraudulent and void. It was held that the judgment debtor was precluded by this section from raising this defence. The Full Bench held that it did not make any difference whether the objection was raised by the judgment debtor by a suit of his own or by way of defence in a suit brought against him. Similarly if A obtains a decree against B as legal representative of C and in execution of the decree property alleged to belong to the estate of C is sold and purchased by A and A sues B for possession, B is precluded by this section from contending that the property belonged to him and that it did not form part of the estate of C (e3). Bharam ... case has been followed by the High Court of Madras (e4). The Madras decisions require reconsideration in the light of the Full Bench ruling referred to above.

Questions relating to execution discharge or satisfaction.—Questions relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree arising between the parties to the suit or their representatives are within this section and they must be decided in execution and not by separate suit. The following are examples of such questions:—

1. Property wrongly taken in execution. If the decree holder takes in execution land not included in the decree or in excess of the decree the judgment debtor must apply under this section for the recovery of such land, and a separate suit for that purpose will not lie (f).

Property taken in execution of decree subsequently amended. If a mortgagee brings property to sale in execution of a decree for sale and an error in the mortgage amount is subsequently discovered, the judgment debtor claiming a refund of the excess (g) or the decree holder claiming to recover the deficit (h) must apply under this section and a separate suit will not lie.

3. Property taken in execution of ex parte decree set aside.—If property is realized in execution of an ex parte decree which is afterwards set aside, the judgment debtor

4 Injunction granted by decree —A suit to enforce a permanent injunction granted by a decree is barred by this section The remedy is by execution (j)

5 Objection to attachment or sale by parties or their representatives —See notes below under the same heading

6 Adjustment of decree —The question whether a decree has been paid or adjusted out of Court is one for the Court of execution to decide under this section If the judgment debtor applies to enter up satisfaction of a decree by a writing in the nature of a compromise and the decree holder objects that the writing was obtained by fraud the question is one relating to the discharge of the decree to be decided by the Court of execution under this section (k) If the adjustment has not been certified by the judgment debtor within the time allowed by law and the decree holder proceeds to execute the decree the dispute no doubt is one relating to the satisfaction of the decree but it cannot be dealt with either under this or any other section relating to execution for an uncertified adjustment cannot be recognized by any Court executing the decree (l) See O 21 r 2 (3)

7 Agreement not to execute decree —If the judgment debtor objects that the decree holder had prior to the passing of the decree agreed not to execute it or to execute it only in part the question is one which according to all the Courts (m) except Calcutta (n) and Rangoon (o) should be determined under this section by the Court of execution The Calcutta and Rangoon Court consider that the real question in such a case is whether the decree to be executed is the decree as passed by the Court or as agreed upon by the parties and that such an inquiry is outside the scope of this section for the section presupposes the existence of a decree as to which there is no dispute The Lahore High Court has held that an objection that the decree holder had agreed prior to the decree that the judgment debtor would not be personally liable cannot be heard by a Court of execution for that would be to alter the terms of the decree (p)

8 Substituted share —Where a decree gives a right to possession of a share in an ijmali mahal which has prior to the date of the decree been partitioned under the Estates Partition Act (Beng Act 5 1897) the Court in proceedings for execution of the decree has power under this section to put the decree holder in possession of the specific land substituted for his share on partition (q)

9 Accretion to mortgaged property —The question whether certain property is an accretion to the mortgaged property is a question to be determined under this section in execution of a decree for redemption obtained by the mortgagor against the mortgagee (r)

10 Waste committed by judgment debtor after decree for possession —The question whether the judgment debtor has committed waste e g cut down trees after a decree against him for possession is one to be dealt with under this section and not by a separate suit (s)

11 Decree for possession —Where a decree is passed for possession in a suit for pre emption conditional on the plaintiff paying a specified sum of money within a time fixed by the Court and the money is paid but possession is not delivered to the plaintiff his only remedy is by an application under this section A suit for possession is barred under this section (t)

Questions not relating to execution discharge or satisfaction —If the question that arises between the parties or their representatives does not relate to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree the section does not apply and a separate suit will lie The following are leading cases on the subject —

(1) Questions as to the validity of the decree —The Court executing the decree has no power to go behind the decree and question its validity See note—Powers of Court executing the decree—under sec 38 supra Such a question can only be tried by regular suit (u) and the same applies to an objection that the decree was obtained by fraud (v) A reversioner against whom a decree is being executed as legal representative of the deceased judgment debtor cannot object in execution that the debt for which the decree was passed was not due but may file a separate suit for a declaration to that effect (w)

(2) Mal administration of judgment debtor s estate —A decree holder failing to realize his decree by execution against the judgment debtor s executor may file a suit against the executor for the administration of the estate and for an account on the footing of mal administration This is his only remedy for the conduct of the executor is not a matter for the Court of execution (x)

(3) Second suit for redemption —When a mortgagor is in effect bringing a suit to execute a previous mortgage decree for redemption the suit is barred under this section (y) But if the right to redeem was reserved to him by the decree in the previous suit a fresh suit for redemption will lie ( ) The better opinion is that if the former mortgage decree does not extinguish the right of redemption a fresh suit for redemption will not be barred See note Finality of decree in redemption suits at page 73 Su h a suit is not an execution of the former decree but a fresh exercise of the same right

Parties to the suit —If the question is one relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree but does not arise between the parties to the suit the section does not apply and a suit is not barred Parties mean parties who are opposed to each other in the suit though not necessarily as plaintiff and defendant (a) for in a partition suit co defendants may be opposed to each other Questions arising between parties who are not opposed to each other or between a party and a stranger do not fall under section 47 The following are illustrations —

tion of assets (c) or between joint decree holders inter se (d) are not within the section

(2) Questions between judgment debtors inter se—The Allahabad High Court has held that questions between judgment debtors inter se are not within the section (e) But the Madras High Court has recently held that they are (f) and this has been followed by Rangoon (g)

(3) Questions between a party and his own representative are not within the section (h)

A surety is under sec 145 not a party except for purposes of appeal (i) When a party is suing or being sued in a representative capacity [sec 11 Explanation VI and O 1 r 8] all persons whom such party represents are parties Thus if a decree is passed against a karnavan of a tarwad in his representative capacity all members of the tarwad are parties to the suit (j) in their capacity of members of the tarwad (k) A minor (l) or a lunatic (m) not represented by a proper guardian ad litem is deemed not to be a party to the suit An objection however on this ground cannot be taken in execution proceedings against the minor or lunatic for an executing Court cannot go behind the decree but the judgment may be attacked in revision or by appeal or by a regular suit (m) A judgment debtor who objected to a sale of property on the ground that he had acquired a fresh title to it subsequent to the decree was held not to be a party to the suit in respect of that objection (n) A benamidar is neither a party nor a representative of a party within this section (o)

Explanation to the section and parties to suit—Under section 244 of the Code of 1882 the High Courts of Allahabad (p) and Calcutta (q) held that a plaintiff whose suit had been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit had been dismissed ceased to be parties to the suit On the other hand it was held by the High Court of Madras (r) and Bombay (s) that such persons continued to be parties to the suit The Explanation gives effect to the latter view Objections therefore to attachment or sale by such persons come within this section and not O 21 r 58 (t) In Krishnappa v Periaswamy (u) the Madras High Court held that a defendant against whom the suit was dismissed on account of misjoinder is not a party In a later case (v) however the same High Court held that a defendant against whom the plaintiff abandoned his case was still a party but that if his name had been struck off the record under O 1 r 10(2) he would not have been a party This was approved of in Sathu Kanar v Ramaswami (w) which ruled that the ground of exoneration is immaterial and the real test is whether or not the defendant s name remains on the record If the defendant s name is struck off the record he is not a party (x) An order that the other defendants be exempted is equivalent to an order of dismissal of the suit as against them (y)

Representatives —The term representative in this section includes not only legal representative in the sense of heirs executors or administrators but also representative in interest that is any transferee of the decree holder s interest or any transferee of the judgment debtor s interest who so far as such interest is concerned is bound by the decree ( ) It was at one time supposed that a transferee by judicial sale could not be a representative (a) but this view is no longer tenable It was also said that a representative is a person who succeeds to the rights of any of the parties after suit (b) but this is incorrect for a transferee may be bound by the decree on the doctrine of lis pendens (c) The Bombay High Court has recently held that a purchaser lite pendente is not the representative of his vendor (d) but this it is submitted is incorrect A Calcutta case said that to determine whether a particular person is a representative of a party the two tests to be applied are first whether any portion of the interest of the decree holder or of the judgment debtor which was originally vested in one of the parties has by the act of parties or by operation of law vested in the person who is sought to be treated as representative and secondly if there has been a devolution of interest whether so far as such interest is concerned that person is bound by the decree (e) A devisee (f) a legatee (g) and a person taking joint property by survivorship (h) have been held to be representatives The following are illustrations of persons held to be representatives under this section

(1) A transferee of a decree or of the interest of any decree holder in a joint decree within the meaning of O 21 r 16 is a representative of the decree holder (i) A transferee from such transferee is also a representative of the decree holder (j)

A judgment creditor who attaches a decree held by the judgment debtor against another is a representative of the judgment debtor A holds a decree against B C obtains a decree against A and in execution attaches the decree held by A against B C is a representative of A in proceedings in execution of A s decree against B (k) See O 21 r 53 (3)

(2) A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5 000 B then sells certain property belonging to him to C C is not a representative of B for the decree is a simple money decree and does not relate to the specific property sold to C (l)

(4) Purchaser of judgment debtor's equity of redemption under a private sale—A obtains a decree against B for sale of certain property mortgaged to him by B After the date of the decree B sells his equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to C C is a "representative" of B the judgment debtor for the property having been purchased after it was affected by A's mortgage decree C is to that extent bound by A's decree Hence any question relating to the execution of A's decree and arising between A and C must be determined by the Court executing A's decree and not by a separate suit (n) The same procedure would apply even if B had transferred his interest in the property to C during the pendency of the suit and before the passing of the decree (o)

(5) Purchaser of judgment debtor's equity of redemption at a judicial sale—A obtains a decree against B for the sale of certain property mortgaged to him by B Before the property could be sold in execution of A's decree X who holds a money decree against B brings B's equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to sale in execution of his decree and it is purchased by C C is a "representative" of B the judgment debtor for the property having been purchased after it was affected by A's mortgage decree C is to that extent bound by A's decree Hence any question relating to the execution of A's decree and arising between A and C must be determined by the Court executing A's decree and not by a separate suit (p)

(6) A purchaser of property from a party to a suit in which an injunction has been granted affecting such property is not a "representative" within the meaning of this section—A obtains a decree against B restraining B by an injunction from obstructing him in the exercise of his right of way to his land over B's land A then sells his land to C If B obstructs C in the enjoyment of the right of way C's proper remedy is by way of suit against B and not in execution under this section The reason is that an injunction does not run with the land and C cannot therefore claim the benefit of the decree against B (q) Note that C is not a transferee of the decree but of the property only See notes to s 50 "Decree for injunction"

(7) The Official Assignee claiming property on behalf of the creditors of an insolvent judgment debtor is not a "representative" of the judgment debtor within the meaning of this section (r)

(9) A purchaser from the judgment debtor of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom is a representative of the judgment debtor If the holding is sold in execution of the decree against the judgment debtor and he is dispossessed by the auction purchaser he may apply for possession under this section and not under O 21 r 100 (t)

(10) A purchaser from a judgment debtor of a portion of a holding is so far as his interest is concerned bound by the decree for rent obtained against the judgment debtor under s 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 and by the sale in execution of that decree He is therefore a representative of the judgment debtor and if he is dispossessed by the auction purchaser he may apply for possession under this section but not under O 21 r 100 (u)

(11) A surety for the performance of a decree is not a representative of a party within the meaning of this section (v) See s 145 below

Objections to attachment or sale by parties or their representatives — Objections to attachment made by a judgment debtor or his representative must be distinguished from those made by either of them on behalf of a third person In the former case the objection comes under this section and a separate suit is barred The order however operates as a decree and a second appeal lies from it In the latter case the objection is in effect one by a third person and it fall under O 21 r 58 The objector may proceed either by an application under r 58 or by a regular suit If he proceeds by an application under r 58 there is no appeal from the order but he may file a suit as provided by O 21 r 63 Such a suit must be filed within one year from the date of the order

If the judgment debtor objects that the property is not liable to attachment or sale (w) or that the decree holder in connivance with a Court peon has misappropriated part of the property attached (x) the objection is by the judgment debtor on his own behalf and it must be decided by the executing Court under this section Similarly if property is attached as property of a deceased judgment debtor in the hands of his legal representative and the latter objects that it is not property of the deceased but his own property the case falls under this section for the legal representative is not setting up a jus tertii (y) But if the objection is made by the judgment debtor or his representative not on his own behalf but on account of a third party as trustee (z) or as sebait of an idol (a) or on the ground that the property is wakf (b) the objection is under O 21 r 58 and not under this section

Objections to attachment or sale by third parties —If the objection to attachment is made by a third party he may proceed either under O 21 r 58 or by a regular suit (c) and the claim cannot be dealt with under this section (d) See notes above Objection to attachment or sale by parties or their representatives

Execution purchaser —We now proceed to consider cases where property of the judgment debtor has been sold in execution of the decree and questions in which the auction purchaser is concerned arise subsequent to the sale These questions fall into two classes according to the parties between whom they arise —

A —Questions between the decree holder on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other hand the auction purchaser being only interested in the result

B —Questions between the auction purchaser on the one hand and a party to the suit or his representative on the other hand

A Questions between the decree holder on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other the execution purchaser being only interested in the result —

These questions being essentially questions between parties to the suit fall within this section (e) It is well settled that as between the judgment debtor and a decree holder an objection to the sale in execution can only be taken in execution and sec 244 (now sec 47) prohibits a suit by a party or his representative against an auction purchaser to raise a question which as between the judgment debtor and the decree holder must have been determined under that section (f) The fact that the auction purchaser who was not a party to the suit is interested in the result does not prevent the question being a question between the parties These questions therefore must be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit The leading case on the subject is Prosunno Kumar v Kali Das (g) where their Lordships of the Privy Council said It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244 [now s 47] and that when a question has arisen as to the execution discharge or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed the fact that the purchaser who is no party to the suit is interested in the result has never been held a bar to the application of the section. In Prosunno Kumar s case a suit was brought by the judgment debtor against his co sharers and against the judgment creditor and the auction purchaser to set aside a sale in execution on the ground of fraud The fraud alleged was that the judgment creditor had obtained a decree against the judgment debtor and co sharers and in execution of the decree attached the whole of the zamindari which belonged to the judgment debtor and his co sharers that thereafter the judgment debtor paid his quota of the judgment debt and it was arranged with the judgment creditor that the judgment debtor s share should be exempted from sale that pursuant to the arrangement the judgment-creditor sold the shares of the co sharers and obtained satisfaction of his decree but that afterwards the judgment creditor in collusion with the co sharers the decree holder and the auction purchaser got the sale set aside and caused the whole zamindari including the judgment debtor s share to be attached and sold The Privy Council held that the plaintiff s remedy was by an application under this section and the question being one relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree a separate suit to se aside the sale was barred under this section

[4] A judgment debtor may seek to set aside a sale on grounds other than those mentioned above A judgment debtor seeking to set aside a sale on any of the following grounds must proceed by an application under this section and not by a separate suit —that the sale is illegal or a nullity for want of notice under O 21 r 22 (h) that the judgment debtor has been adjudged insolvent and the decree gives no charge upon the land (i) that the property is not liable to attachment and sale (j) that the sale is in contravention of O 34 r 14 (k) that the sale was not warranted by the terms of the decree (l) that the property sold did not belong to the judgment debtor (m) that the decree holder had purchased without leave of the Court (n) that the decree had been adjusted (o) that the sale is invalid having been held after a stay order (p) that the decree holder s own property was sold by mistake instead of that of the judgment debtor (q)

B Que tions between th auction purchaser on the one hand and a party to the suit or his representative on the other hand —

One class of cases arising under this head is where the decree holder himself is the purchaser and the judgment debtor claims to set aside the sale in execution In such a case the judgment debtor must proceed by an application under this section and not by a separate suit (r)

Another class of cases arising between the auction purchaser on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other is where the auction purchaser seeks to recover pos session of the property purchased by him The question that arises in such cases is whe ther the Court purchaser mu t proceed by an application under this section coupled with

O 21 r 95 or whether he is entitled to bring a separate suit for possession? This depends on who is the purchaser for the property may be purchased by the decree holder himself with the leave of the Court under O 21 r 72 or it may be purchased by a stranger

First where the decree holder himself is the purchaser —Whether the decree holder purchaser must proceed by an application depends upon—(1) whether for the purpose of recovering possession of the property he is to be regarded as a party to the suit within the meaning of s 47 or whether he has ceased to be a party to the suit by reason of his purchase and (2) whether the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of s 47 Upon these points there is a conflict of decisions

According to the view taken by the High Court of Madras (s) and by a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta (t) the decree holder retains his character of a party to the suit though he is also the purchaser and the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of s 47 The two conditions laid down by the section are therefore satisfied and a separate suit for possession is barred under s 47 The High Court of Madras has also applied sec 47 to an application by a purchaser from a decree holder purchaser resisted by the judgment debtor in obtaining possession the reason given being in one case (u) that a purchaser from a decree holder who has purchased at a Court sale is a representative of the decree holder and in another (v) that he is a representative of the judgment debtor within the meaning of this section In two of the cases cited above however the Madras Court observed that if this question had not already been settled by previous decisions of that Court they would be disposed to hold that proceedings for obtaining possession could not be regarded as those relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of this section (w) In a recent Full Bench case it seems to have been assumed that such proceedings related to the execution of the decree (x)

According to the other view which is the view taken by a Full Bench of each of the High Courts of Allahabad (y) Patna ( ) and Bombay (a) and in recent cases by the High Court of Lahore (b) a decree holder purchaser stands on the same footing as a purchaser who is a stranger so that he may proceed either by an application under O 21 r 95 or by a separate suit for possession This view proceeds on the ground that sec 47 does not apply either because the question as to delivery of possession is not one relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree or because a decree holder after he becomes purchaser of the property can no longer be said to be a party to the suit In a recent case a Divisional Bench of the Patna High Court took quite the opposite view on both points (c) without reference to the Full Bench decision of the same Court in Haji Abdul v Raja Ram (d) The Oudh Court has held (e) that though the decree holder purchaser is a party to the suit yet the question is not one under section 47 because the act of placing the purchaser in possession does not involve the decision of a question relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree The cases in which it has been held that an auction purchaser even if he is the decree holder is not a party to the suit require reconsideration in view of the ruling of the Judicial Committee that such an auction purchaser is a party to the suit (f)

These two divergent views lead to different results —

(1) According to the first view that is the view taken by the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta a decree holder purchaser who seeks to recover possession from the judgment debtor of the property purchased by him at the auction sale can proceed only by an application under O 21 r 95 which raises a question under sec 47 such application must be made within 3 years from the date on which the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act Sch I art 181] According to the latter view that is the view taken by the High Courts of Allahabad Patna Bombay and Lahore and the Chief Court of Oudh he may proceed by an application under O 21 r 95 Such an application according to that view does not raise a question under sec 47 therefore if he does not proceed by an application or if he makes the application but it is unsuccessful he may fall back upon his title and sue for possession Such suit may be brought within 12 years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act 1908 Sch I art 138] so that even if the time for an application under O 21 r 95 has expired he may proceed by way of suit

(2) According to the other view the application for delivery of possession falls under s 47 and the order made on the application amounts to a decree [s 2 (2)] and is appealable as such According to the latter view s 47 does not apply to the case and the application is entirely one under O 21 r 95 and no appeal lies from an order made upon such application

If the decree holder purchaser is obstructed in obtaining possession by the judgment debtor and a stranger to the suit the case does not come within s 47 and he may bring a suit for possession against them (g)

When a decree holder at a Court sale obtained possession of land in excess of what was included in the mortgage and the decree the Allahabad High Court held the judgment debtor s suit to recover the excess was not barred as the auction purchaser was not the representative of the decree holder (although he was the same person) (h)

Secondly where the purchaser is a stranger —Where a stranger auction purchaser seeks to recover possession from the judgment debtor two questions arise (1) whether the purchaser is a representative of either party to the suit and 2) whether the question of possession is one relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree The second question has already been discussed with reference to the decree holder purchaser and the conflict of decisions on the subject has been noted With reference to the first question the case does not fall under the section if the stranger auction purchaser is a representative of the judgment debtor for then the question would be between a party and his own representative But it would fall under the section if he were a representative of the decree holder Again the case would not come under the section if he was a representative of neither The decisions on all these points are very conflicting The High Court of Bombay has consistently held that an auction purchaser who is a stranger is not the representative of either party to the suit (i) The High Courts of Calcutta (j) and Allahabad (k) have held that he is not the representative of the decree holder but that he is the representative of the judgment debtor In Madras there is a hopeless conflict of opinion The conflict was sought to be set at rest by a reference to a Full Bench in Veerindramuthu v Maya Nadan (l) but it cannot be said that the object was attained Oldfield J and Sheshagiri Ayyar J held that a stranger purchaser at a sale in execution of a money decree was a representative of the judgment debtor but not of the decree holder while Abdur Rahim A C J held that whether he was to be regarded as a representative of the one or the other depended upon the nature of the question raised and the right set up by the contesting party The preponderance of authority in Madras seems to be in favour of the view that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a money decree who is a stranger is the representative of the judgment debtor and not of the decree holder with reference to questions relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree Madras cases cited in footnote (m) decided that a stranger purchaser is not the representative of the decree holder while those in footnote (n) decided that he is Madras cases cited in footnote (o) decided that a stranger purchaser is the representative of the judgment debtor while those cited in footnote (p) decided that he is not The High Court of Lahore has expressed the view that a stranger purchaser is not the representative of the judgment debtor (q) The Oudh Court has adopted the view taken by Abdur Rahim A C J (r)

All the High Courts (s) except the High Court of Madras seem to hold that where an auction purchaser who is a stranger is resisted in obtaining possession by the judgment debtor of the property purchased by him in execution he may apply for delivery of possession under O 21 r 95 or he may bring a regular suit for possession The provisions of s 47 do not apply either because he is not the representative of the decree holder or because the question as to delivery of possession is not one relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of the section The period of limitation for an application under O 21 r 95 is 3 years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act 1908 Sch I art 181] and that for a suit is 12 years from the same date [ibid art 138] He is entitled to bring the suit without making any application under O 21 r 95 and he may sue even after an unsuccessful application The High Court of Bombay has held that an auction purchaser even though a benamidar for the decree holder is a stranger for the purposes of this rul (t) In Madras the Full Bench decision in Veerindramuthu v Maya Nadan (u) has been taken as an authority for the proposition that an auction purchaser though he be a stranger must proceed by an application under s 47 and that he is not entitled to bring a regular suit for possession In the Order of Reference it was assumed that the question as to delivery of possession related to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of s 47 The judgments of the learned Judges seem to have been influenced by the observations of the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumar s case as to the cheap and speedy disposal of objections to execution sales These observations were appropriate when the question is really between the parties to the suit and the auction purchaser is only an interested spectator but they are altogether irrelevant when the question is between a judgment debtor and a stranger purchaser at an auction sale The scope of the section is expressly limited to questions between parties to the suit and their representatives and the observations of the Privy Council do not and cannot extend the section beyond those limits It is high time that the section be amended and the conflict set at re t

Besides cases under O 21 r 95 questions between an execution purcha er may arise in other ways The High Court of Allahabad has held that where property not included in the mortgage deed or in the mortgage decree is sold and delivered to a stranger purchaser in execution the judgment debtor is entitled to bring a suit against the auction purchaser for recovery of the property and that the provisions of s 47 do not apply to the case (v) But the Madras High Court following the construction put upon the Full Bench decision in Veerindramuttu v Maya Nadan has held that such a case comes within s 47 and that a regular suit is barred (w) A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that an auction purchaser under a decree which has been after confirmation of the sale set aside as a result of a separate suit is entitled to apply under s 47 for recovery of the purcha e money from the decree holder (x)

If the transferee of a decree dies pending execution the executing Court has power under this section to inquire whether the transferee was merely a benamidar for another and to allow the real owner to execute the decree (a)

omission of these words The one is that the words omitted may have been regarded as superfluous for a plea that the execution of a decree may be stayed is equivalent to the plea that the decree should not be executed and it is thus a question relating to the execution of the decree (b) The other view is that those words having been deliberately omitted by the Legislature in the present section questions relating to the stay of execution are no longer within the section and no appeal lies from orders determining such questions (c) The latter view it is submitted is the correct view

Sub section (2) Court may treat suit as an application—This sub section is new It gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts under the repealed Code It enables the Court to treat an application under this section as a suit or a suit as an application If a suit is brought for the determination of a question which falls under this section the Court has a discretion either to dismiss the suit or to treat the plaint as an application under this section and dispose of it accordingly provided the Court in which the suit is brought has jurisdiction to execute the decree (d) and the execution of the decree was not barred at the date of the suit (e) The power however is discretionary and the Court may or may not exercise it (f) If the decree under appeal is otherwise in order the Court of Appeal may exercise this power and treat a plaint filed in the lower Court as an application under this section and the decree as an order under this section This is because section 47 affects procedure only and not jurisdiction (sec 99) but it will not do so unless the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to execute the original decree (g) and the suit was filed within the period of limitation prescribed for applications under this section namely the period prescribed by art 181 of the Limitation Act 1908 (h) In a case where a party instead of applying under this section filed a suit which he prosecuted to second appeal the High Court of Allahabad in the exercise of its discretion refused to treat the plaint as an application (i)

In a recent Allahabad case a minor objected in execution proceedings that he had not been represented by a guardian ad litem in the suit and the Court of execution refused to entertain the objection as one affecting the validity of the decree on appeal from the order the High Court of Allahabad treated the proceeding as a suit and made a declaration that the decree was not binding on the minor (j)

Where a sale is sought to be set aside on the ground that the decree was obtained by fraud—It has been stated above that the procedure for setting aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale is by an application under O 21 r 90 and not by a separate suit But an execution sale may also be challenged on the ground that the decree on which it is founded is itself tainted with fraud and in this case the remedy is by regular suit The following are the leading cases on the subject —

1 A suit will lie to set aside a decree and the sale held in execution of the decree where both the decree and sale are impeached on the ground of fraud (k) The reason is that the question of the validity of a decree can only be determined by a regular suit See notes above Note C Non execution question between parties

Appeal —Sec 2 (2) provides that the determination of any question under sec 47 is a decree unless it is appealable as an order A determination under O 21 r 90 is appealable as an order under O 43 r 1 (j) Such a determination when it is between the parties to the suit or their representatives falls under sec 47 but is nevertheless subject to one appeal only as an order under sec 104 The same observation applies to a decision under O 21 r 2 which also is appealable as an order under O 43 r 1 (j) Similarly a decision under O 21 r 34 is appealable as an order under O 43 r 1 (i) and is subject to one appeal only All other decisions in execution under section 47 are decrees and subject to first and second appeal

As regards appeal therefore orders in execution proceedings may be divided into three classes —

(1) Orders under this section which are decrees and subject to first and second appeal

(2) Orders which whether they fall under this section or not are declared to be orders under O 43 r 1 and are subject to one appeal only

(3) Non appealable orders generally of an interlocutory nature

Attempts are frequently made on behalf of appellants to shew that orders in execution proceedings which are not appealable are appealable (m) and that orders that are subject to one appeal only are decree from which a second appeal can be preferred (n) Conversely attempts are made on behalf of respondents that orders which are appealable are not appealable and that orders which are subject to a second appeal are subject only to one appeal e g that they fall under O 21 r 90 and not under sec 47 (o)

Interlocutory orders in execution proceedings —A party is not bound to prefer an appeal from every order in execution proceedings though the order is appealable Whether the order be appealable or not it may be challenged by the party aggrieved in his appeal against the final order which determines the rights of the parties (p)

An order in execution proceedings which is merely processual or interlocutory does not come within the section It must be an order determining the rights and liabilities of the parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree and not merely an

Changes made in the section —This section corresponds with the third and fourth paras of s 230 of the Code of 1882 which were as follows —

Where an application to execute a decree for the payment of money or delivery of other property has been made under this section and granted no subsequent application to execute the same decree shall be granted after the expiration of twelve years from any of the following dates (namely) —

(a) the date of the decree sought to be enforced or of the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same or

(b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money or the delivery of any property to be made at a certain date—the date of the default in making the payment or delivering the property in respect of which the applicant seeks to enforce the decree

Nothing in this section shall prevent the Court from granting an application for execution of a decree after the expiration of the said term of twelve years where the judgment debtor has by fraud or force prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application

The following alterations have been made —

(1) Section 230 applied only to decrees for the payment of money or delivery of other property The present section applies to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction

(2) Section 230 applied only where an application for execution had been made under this section and granted The words under this section as also the words and granted have been omitted in the present section The result is that the rule of limitation contained in this section applies whether the previous application for execution was made under a former Code or the present Code and whether the application was granted or not See note below Orders on applications for execution

(3) The words or the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same in sec 230 cl. (a) have been omitted See note below Date of decree

(4) The words or at recurring periods in sub section (1) cl (b) are new They are intended to give effect to certain decisions under s 230 of the Code of 1882 See notes below Date of default

(5) Clause (b) of sub section (2) is new It gives effect to certain decisions under s 230 of the Code of 1882 See notes below Successive applications for execution of decrees of Chartered High Courts

Successive applications for execution of decrees of Courts other than Chartered High Courts —This section deals with the maximum limit of time for execution it does not prescribe the period within which each application for execution is to be made (t)

As explained in the next paragraph sub section 2 (b) has the effect of excluding Chartered High Courts from the operation of the section The section only applies to Courts other than Chartered High Court

A decree holder is entitled to present in succession any number of applications for executions of the same decree (u) and the Court has no power to refuse execution unless—

(ii) the application is barred under art 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908 or

(iii) the execution of the decree is barred under the present section [illegible] the application for execution may not be barred under (i) or (ii) above.

High Courts in the exercise of ordinary original civil jurisdiction or of orders of His Majesty in Council This was inconsistent with section 230 of the Code of 1882 and so that section was held to be independent of the corresponding article 180 of the Limitation Act 1877 (y) These decisions have now been given statutory authority by sub section 2 (b) The twelve years rule therefore does not apply to decree passed by a Chartered High Court in its original civil jurisdiction Such decrees may be kept alive for any number of years and so may orders in Council made in Privy Council appeals ( ) Decrees of Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their Appellate Civil jurisdiction are not within article 183 of the Limitation Act 1908 (a)

Orders on applications for execution—An application for execution may either be—

(1) granted or

(2) refused—

(a) in circumstances operating as a bar to future execution as where it is refused on the ground that it is barred on the principle of res judicata or barred by the law of limitation or

(b) in circumstances not operating as a bar to future execution as where it is refused on the ground that it is not in accordance with law [O 21 r 17] (b) or

(3) withdrawn by the applicant—

(a) in circumstances operating as a bar to future execution as where the withdrawal was with the object of abandoning execution or

(b) in circumstances not operating as a bar to future execution (c)

Under s 230 of the Code of 1882 the twelve years limitation imposed by that section applied only if one at least of the previous applications was granted by the Court but not otherwise Under the present section it matters not whether the previous applications have been granted or refused or withdrawn All that the section now provides is that where an application to execute a decree has been made no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years from the date specified in the section

Fresh application —The phrase fresh application has been substituted for subsequent application to make it clear that the application referred to in this section is a substantive application for execution and not merely an ancillary application made with the object of moving the Court to proceed in the matter of a substantive application already on the file (d) Thus where property has been attached on an application for execution an application for sale of the attached property is not a fresh application to execute the decree within the meaning of this section (e) Similarly where a warrant issued for the arrest of a judgment debtor on an application for execution is returned with the remark that the judgment debtor could not be found a subsequent application for the arrest of the judgment debtor is not a fresh application to execute the decree within the meaning of this section but is merely an incidental application to carry on proceedings already commenced (f) On the same principle it has been held that an application to revive execution proceedings which have not terminated is not a fresh application within the meaning of this section (g) nor an application by the legal representatives of a decree holder for execution on his death pending execution proceedings (h) But an application for attachment of property cannot be treated as a continuation of a previous application for arrest (i) nor an application for attachment of other property not included in the previous application for attachment (j)

An application to transfer a decree to another Court for execution is not an application for execution within the meaning of this section Such an application though made within twelve years from the date of the decree will not entitle the decree holder to execution if the application for execution to the Court to which the decree is transferred is made after the expiration of twelve years (k)

Terminus a quo for limitation—The period of limitation within which a decree may be executed is twelve years from—

(a) the date of the decree or

(b) the date of default in respect of the payment of money or the delivery of property when such payment or delivery has been ordered to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods either by the decree or by any subsequent order

Date of decree—The decree capable of execution is the decree of the Court of first instance until appeal and after that the decree of the Court of last instance see note What decree may be executed under sec 36 above If the decree is that of a Court of first instance the period runs from the date of the decree If there is a preliminary decree and a final decree the two must be read together and the date is the date of the final decree (l) If the decree to be executed is an appellate decree the period runs from the date of the appellate decree whether it affirms sets aside or modifies the original decree (m) but not if no appeal lies (n) or if the appeal is dismissed for default (o) The words or of the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same in section 230 of the last Code have been omitted as misleading being open to the construction that where the original decree was modified or set aside on appeal the period of twelve years was to run from the date of the original decree Where a decree is passed in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant and part of the decree is appealed from and the rest is not the period of 12 years prescribed by this section runs from the date of the appellate decree both as regards the application to execute the portion appealed from and the portion not appealed from The reason is that there is only one decree that can be executed and that is the decree of the appellate Court (p) Where a decree is passed not jointly but severally against two or more defendants and one of the defendants appeals from the decree the period of 12 years as against the barred as the section applies to mortgage decrees and the law of limitation applicable to a suit or proceeding is that in force at the date of its institution (j)

Fraud — Fraud or force on the part of a judgment debtor at any stage of the execution gives a new starting point for the period of limitation (k) The word fraud in this section should not be narrowly interpreted (l) The fraud dealt with by this section is such as prevents the execution of the decree within twelve years and judges ought to take a broad view of conduct deliberately adopted by judgment debtors with a view to defeating and delaying the just payment of their debts by frivolous and futile objections which are dishonest upon the face of them (m) Locking up the house so as to prevent attachment of movable property (n) or evading arrest by any contrivance or dishonestly evading payment by eluding service of warrant (o) is fraud within the meaning of this section So is a fictitious transfer of his property made by a judgment debtor to defeat or delay execution (p) If the judgment debtor presents an application to set aside a decree passed ex parte against him with the sole object of delaying execution proceedings he is guilty of fraud within the meaning of this section (q) But though the Court has the power to grant execution after the expiration of twelve years from the date of the decree on the ground of fraud or force on the part of the judgment debtor the Court should not use that power unless it is satisfied that the decree holder on his part had been diligent in proceeding with execution since the date of the decree (r) It is doubtful whether the fraud of one of several judgment debtors keeps the decree alive against all of them (s)

Limitation Act section 4 —When the twelve years period expired on a day on which the Court was closed the Calcutta High Court applied section 4 of the Limitation Act on the principle that when a party is prevented from doing a thing on a particular day by the act of the Court he is entitled to do it at the first available opportunity (t)

Limitation Act section 15 (1) —Sec 15 (1) of the Limitation Act 1908 cannot be applied in computing the period of 12 years prescribed by the present section (u)

Minority —A decree is passed in August 1897 on behalf of a minor in a suit brought by his guardian for partition and mesne profits Various applications for execution are made by the minor through his guardian within 3 years of each other The period of 12 years prescribed by this section expires in August 1909 The minor attains majority in November 1909 and in November 1910 he applies for execution of the decree and claims an extension of the period on the ground of minority Is he entitled to any extension either under sec 6 of the Limitation Act 1908 or under any other law ? The High Court of Madras answered the question in the negative on the ground that sec 6 of the Limitation Act is expressly limited to cases where the limitation is provided in the Limitation Act itself and that there is no law apart from the said sec 6 under which minority is a ground of exemption from the operation of the law of limitation (v) The High Court of Bombay agrees with the Madras High Court in holding that sec 6 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases dealt with by the Act itself but differs from that Court in that it holds that the minor is entitled to an extension 4 of the period under the general principle of law that time does not run against a minor (w) The same Court has held that where the decree has been obtained in the first instance by an adult the fact that the decree on his death passes to an heir who is a minor does not extend the period of 12 years prescribed by the present section (x) The latter case was decided under the Limitation Act for it was said that time having begun to run against the decree holder the subsequent disability of the minor heir was under that Act ineffectual to stop it The Lahore Court does not apply section 6 of the Limitation Act on the ground that sec 48 is enacted for the benefit of the judgment debtor in order that he should not be harassed for ever by execution proceedings (y) The High Court of Allahabad has followed the Madras decision (z)

Where decree transferred for execution—The Court to which a decree is transferred for execution has power to determine whether execution is barred under this section (a)

Execution by Collector—The words period of limitation in para 11 (3) of Schedule III to this Code are not confined to periods of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act The period during which the Collector is acting under that Schedule is excluded in calculating the twelve years period under this section (b)

Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act 17 of 1879—In computing the period of 12 years provided by this section the time taken up in procuring a conciliator s certificate as required by the D A P Act is to be excluded (c) A decree for sale on a mortgage passed under that Act does not require to be made absolute hence the period of 12 years is to be computed from the date of the decree and not from the date of the order making the decree absolute (d)

TRANSFEREES AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES

49 [S 233] Every transferee of a decree shall hold the same subject to the equities (if any) which the judgment debtor might have enforced against the original decree holder

Transferee

Equity of judgment debtor—This is the same principle as that enacted in sec 132 of the Transfer of Property Act 1882 A right of set off is an equity and if the judgment debtor has the right to set off a cross decree under O 21 r 18 he has this right also against the transferee of the decree holder (e) The section applies to all decrees including mortgage decrees (f)

The second illustration is the case of Kristo Ramani v Kedarnath (i) in which it was assumed that the assignee must have notice of the equity It is submitted however that it matters not that the assignee was unaware of the equity provided it was existing at the time of the assignment see sec 132 of the Transfer of Property Act 1882 illustration (1) and the case of Mon Mohan v Dwarka Nath (j) In the latter case the Court said Under section 49 of the Code the assignee of a decree stands in no better position than the assignor and takes it subject to all the equities and defences subsisting at the time of the assignment which the judgment debtor could have asserted against it in the hands of the judgment creditor notwithstanding that the assignee may have had no notice thereof

50 [S 234] (1) Where a judgment debtor dies before the decree has been fully satisfied, the holder of the decree may apply to the Court which passed it to execute the same against the legal representatives of the deceased

Legal representative

(2) Where the decree is executed against such legal representatives he shall be liable only to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of and for the purpose of ascertaining such liability the Court executing the decree may of its own motion or on the application of the decree holder compel such legal representative to produce such accounts as it thinks fit

Changes in the law —The present section differs from the corresponding section 234 of the Code of 1882 in one respect viz that the words fully satisfied have been substituted for the words fully executed See notes below under the head Before the decree has been fully satisfied

Extent of liability of legal representative —This section enables a decree holder to execute his decree against the legal representative of a deceased judgment debtor The property that can be attached is the property of the judgment debtor found in the hands of the representative and the property of the representative from whatever source derived to the extent of that which he has wasted out of the assets come to his hands without satisfying the debts of the deceased (k)

The liability of a legal representative in execution proceeding is confined to the property of the deceased which has actually come to his hands If the decree holder seeks to make the legal representative answerable also for the property of the deceased which with due diligence on his part would have come to his hands his proper remedy is by way of suit against the legal representative and not by proceedings in execution under this section (l)

The extent of the liability of the legal representative is decided by the Court executing the decree and the Court may call for an account of the property of the judgment debtor that has come into the hands of the legal representative The decree holder must prove in the first instance that some assets have come to the legal representative and the onus is then shifted to the latter to shew how the assets including rents and profits have been applied (m)

A decree-holder is entitled under this section to have the amount of the decree paid out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative which have not yet been duly disposed of Hence the legal representative is bound to pay to the decree holder the full amount of the decree though there may be other creditors of the deceased and the assets may not be sufficient to pay them all in full (n)

Legal representative — Legal representative means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased [see s 2 cl (11)] Thus where a judgment debtor dies and a stranger takes possession of his property the decree may be executed against the stranger for he is a legal representative within the meaning of this section see note Legal Representative under sec 2 (11) (o) A residuary legatee in possession of the judgment debtor s estate is his legal representative although letters of administration have not yet been issued to him (p) The purchaser of the business of a firm against which a decree has been passed is not the legal representative of the firm within the meaning of this section The decree against the firm cannot therefore be executed against the purchaser (q)

Before the decree has been fully satisfied —The corresponding section of the Code of 1882 (s 234) provided in effect that if a judgment debtor died before the decree had been fully executed the holder of the decree might apply to the Court which passed it to execute the same against the legal representative of the deceased This gave rise to the question as to when a decree could be said to be fully executed ? It was held by the High Court of Madras that a decree could not be said to be fully executed until the property attached was sold and that if the judgment debtor died before sale his legal representatives ought to be brought on the record and if the property was sold without the legal representatives being brought on the record the sale was absolutely void (r) On the other hand it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that once the property was attached the decree was fully executed and that it was not necessary to bring the legal representatives on the record and a sale held in their absence was not void The latter decisions were based on the ground that once a property was attached it was in the hands of the law and the attachment did not abate on the death of the judgment debtor (s) At the same time there were cases in which it was held that omission to bring the legal representatives on the record did not vitiate the sale but was at most an irregularity within the meaning of sec 311 of the Code of 1882 [now O 21 r 90] (t) It was to remove this conflict of decisions that the word satisfied has been substituted in the present section for the word executed The effect of this alteration in the language is to supersede the Allahabad decisions in so far as they hold that after attachment it was not necessary to bring the legal representatives on the record for a decree cannot be said to be fully satisfied merely because the property was attached Under the present section if the judgment debtor dies after attachment his legal repre entatives may be brought on the record At the same time it has been held that omission to bring the legal repre entatives on the record does not render the sale void but amounts merely to an irregularity within O 21 r 90 and the sale will not be set aside unless substantial injury is proved (u)

May apply to execute the decree against the legal representative"—Where execution proceedings have been commenced again t a judgment debtor they can be continued after his death by substituting the name of the legal representative in place of that of the judgment debtor in the application for execution already on the files of the Court It is not necessary to file a fresh application for execution under O 21 r 11 (t) See O 22 r 12 At the same time notice should be given to the legal represen tative unde O 21 r 22 If such notice has been served on the legal representative the order substituting his name can be made ex parte (w)

The executing Court has power to allow execution against legal representative and to transfer the decree fo execution to another Court without giving any notice to the legal repre entative leaving it to him to raise all just objections to execution in the transferee Court (w)

To which Court application should be made—According to the High Court of Bombay (x) Allahabad (y) and Madras ( ) the application to execute a decree against a legal repre entative must be made to the Court which passed the decree and a Court to which a decree is transferred is not competent to entertain it The Calcutta High Court has held that the application may also be made to the Court to which the decree is trans ferred for execution and that the omission to apply to the Court which pa sed the decree is only an irregularity which is cured by section 99 (a) The Lahore High Court has followed the Calcutta view (b) The Calcutta view has recently been approved by the Privy Council (c)

Death of legal representative—If the legal representative of a judgment debtor against whom execution has been taken out under this section dies before the decree has been fully executed the decree holder may execute the decree against the legal representative of the legal representative to the extent of the as ets of the original judgment debtor that may have come into his hands (d)

Legal representative bound by previous proceedings—The legal representa tive is bound by orders pas ed in execution against the deceased judgment debtor A obtains a decree against B A then transfers the decree to C C applies for execution against B and an order is made for execution after notice to A and B as provided by O 21 r 16 [Code of 1882 s 232] A then dies and his legal representative D is brought on the record under this section The order for execution having been passed in his lifetime D cannot object to execution on the ground that the transfer to C was fraudulent (e)

Decree for injunction—An injunction obtained against a defendant restraining him from obstructing plaintiff's ancient lights may on the death of the defendant be enforced under this section against his son as his legal representative by procedure under O 21 r 32 [Code of 1882 s 260] (f) But such an injunction cannot be enforced under this section against a purchaser of the property from the defendant for an injunction does not run with the land The remedy of the decree holder is to bring a fresh suit for an injunction against the purchaser (g) See notes to s 11 Decree for injunction and res judicata on p 43 above and notes to s 47 Representatives No 6—Purchaser of property etc The Bombay High Court has held that an injunction can be enforced against a person who has purchased while execution proceedings are pending by virtue of the doctrine of lis pendens (h)

Procedure in Execution

51 [New] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may, on the application of the decree holder, order execution of the decree—

Powers of Court to enforce execution

(a) by delivery of any property specifically decreed,

(b) by attachment and sale or by sale without attachment of any property,

(c) by arrest and detention in prison

(d) by appointing a receiver, or

(e) in such other manner as the nature of the relief granted may require

Simultaneous execution—Simultaneous execution both against the property and person of the judgment debtor is allowed under O 21 r 30 But the Court has discretion under O 21 r 21 to refuse simultaneous execution and to allow the decree holder to avail himself of only one mode of execution at a time The Privy Council has said that the difficulties of a litigant in India begin when he has obtained a decree (i) and the Court is not justified in refusing execution against the person on the ground that the decree holder should first proceed against the property (j)

Receiver in execution proceedings—A receiver may be appointed to realize a decree attached in execution proceedings A obtains a decree against B In execution of the decree A attaches a decree held by B against C (O 21 r 53) The Court may appoint a receiver to realize the attached decree if that course is likely to benefit the parties more than the sale of the attached decree (k) Similarly a receiver may be appointed to realize a debt attached in execution of a decree (l) see notes to O 21 r 46 Procedure where garnishee denies debt

Receiver of future maintenance—The Privy Council has held that though a right to future maintenance cannot be attached [s 60 (1) (n)] the Court may in a proper case e g where provision is made for the maintenance of the judgment debtor out of the income of villages appoint a receiver for realizing the rents and paying thereout to the judgment debtor a sum sufficient for his maintenance and the balance to the decree holder (m)

Appeal—A obtains a decree against B By consent of parties C is appointed receiver to take charge of certain properties for the execution of the decree A then applies to the Court for the discharge of C as receiver but the application is refused The order is one relating to execution within the meaning of s 47 and is therefore appealable (n)

Clause (e)—This clause does not authorize a Court to read into a decree a supplementary or alternative relief which is not in the decree Thus where a decree in a suit for redemption directs the defendant mortgagee to deliver to the plaintiff mortgagor the documents of title relating to the mortgaged property but does not provide for an alternative relief the Court has no power under this clause to award damages in execution (o) This conclusion might have been arrived at on the simple ground that a Court executing a decree has no power to add to the terms of a decree

Enforcement of decree against legal representative

52 [S 252] (1) Where a decree is passed against a party as the legal representative of a deceased person, and the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, it may be executed by the attachment and sale of any such property

(2) Where no such property remains in the possession of the judgment debtor and he fails to satisfy the Court that he has duly applied such property of the deceased as is proved to have come into his possession, the decree may be executed against the judgment debtor to the extent of the property in respect of which he has failed so to satisfy the Court in the same manner as if the decree had been against him personally

Scope of the section—Section 50 provides for the case where a decree has been passed against a party and the party dies before the decree is fully satisfied and the decree is sought to be executed against his legal representative The present section provides for the case where a decree is passed against the legal representative of a deceased person In the latter case the legal representative is the judgment debtor (p) and if the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased the section allows the decree to be executed against the property of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative But in so far as the property of the deceased which has come into the hands of the legal representative has not been duly applied by him the decree may be executed against the legal representative as if the decree was to that extent passed against him personally An executor or administrator under the Indian Succession Act 1925 s 323 is bound to pay the creditors of the deceased equally and rateably if he fails to do so he cannot be said to have applied the assets duly within the meaning of this section and he will be personally liable to the extent to which he has not done so To ascertain whether the assets have been duly applied the Court of execution may direct an inquiry into the accounts of the executor or administrator (q) The executor or administrator may shew that he is not liable as he has duly applied the property of the deceased which has come into his possession This is called in English law the plea of plene administravit In an Allahabad case (r) Ashworth J differing from Mukerji J held that the plea could be raised in the suit itself But it is submitted that Mukerji J was right and that in Indian law the plea is confined to execution S

If the legal representative is the heir of a deceased Hindu or Mahomedan every payment by the heir on account of debts due by the deceased would be a due application of the asset whether the debts were paid rateably or not There is no analogy between the case of an executor or administrator governed by the provisions of the Indian Succession Act and of an heir as a legal representative under the Hindu or Mahomedan law (s)

Legal representative — Legal representative means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased and where a party sues or is sued in a representative character the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued (t) See s 2 (11) and notes

As to how far a decree passed against one of several Mahomedan heirs binds the other heirs see Mulla s Principles of Mahomedan Law 9th ed p 21

As to the liability of Hindu sons for their father s debt see s 53 below

Out of the property of the deceased —The expression property includes the income of immovable property though it cannot be both attached and sold (u)

Decree against wrong person as heir and legal representative —A decree obtained against an executor or administrator of the estate of a deceased person is a decree against the estate of the deceased A decree against a karnavan as representative of the deceased binds the estate and this is so even though there has been a disposition by will of which the plaintiff was not aware (v) But a decree obtained against the heir of a deceased Hindu or Mahomedan as his legal representative is not a decree against the estate of the deceased even if the decree provides for the payment of the decretal amount out of the property of the deceased in the hands of such heir Therefore a decree obtained by a creditor of a deceased Hindu against a wrong person as his heir cannot be executed against estate of the deceased in the hands of the rightful heir in possession The creditor must obtain a fresh decree against the rightful heir (w)

Decree against executor who has not intermeddled or proved — A creditor of a deceased debtor cannot sue a person named as executor in the will of the deceased unless he has either administered that is intermeddled with the estate or proved the will Where a decree is obtained against such person and property belonging to the estate of the deceased is sold in execution of the decree the sale does not bind the estate (x)

Liability of ancestral property

53 [New] For the purposes of section 50 and section 52, property in the hands of a son or other descendant which is liable under Hindu law for the payment of the debt of a deceased ancestor, in respect of which a decree has been passed, shall be deemed to be property of the deceased which has come to the hands of the son or other descendant as his legal representative

Scope of the section—The section has been enacted to enforce the recognized rule of the Hindu law namely that members of a joint Hindu family may not escape the payment out of the joint family property of any debt incurred and decreed against their father before his death provided that such debt is not tainted by immorality The section does not apply where the joint family property passes by survivorship to a collateral e g a nephew as he is under no obligation to pay his uncle s debts (y)

Decree —The High Court of Madras has held that the term decree in this section is not confined to money decrees but also includes a decree obtained against a Hindu father for possession of joint family property which the father could sell and which is liable to be sold for his debts (z) The term decree however does not include a decree for an injunction against a Hindu father restraining him from obstructing the plaintiff from using a water tank for such a decree cannot after the father s death be enforced in execution against the sons (a)

Liability of ancestral property in execution proceedings—This section is new It settles a question of procedure on which there was a conflict of judicial decisions To understand the precise scope of the section it is necessary to bear in mind the rule of Hindu law that where a son or grandson takes any ancestral property by survivorship he is bound to pay out of such property all debts including judgments of his ancestor not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes The question is by what procedure is this liability to be enforced ? We proceed to consider the subject under the following four heads —

1 Where a money decree has been passed against the father and the father dies before issue of execution — A and his sons B and C constitute a joint Hindu family owning an ancestral house D obtains a decree against A for Rs 5 000 A dies and on his death B and C take the ancestral property by survivorship D applies for execution of the decree against B and C by attachment and sale of the whole of the family house (b) Is he entitled to do so or must he institute a fresh suit against B and C to recover the debt ? According to the procedure prescribed by this Code D should bring B and C on the record as the legal representatives of A under s 50 and then apply under that section to the Court which passed the decree to execute it against B and C to the extent of the ancestral property come to their hands The words in s 50 are to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his [legal representative s] hands According to the present section the ancestral property in the hands of B and C being liable under Hindu law for the payment of A s debts is deemed for the purposes of s 50 to be the property of the deceased which has come to the hands of B and C as the legal representatives of A If B and C object that the debt in respect of which the decree was passed was tainted with immorality the question is one relating to the execution of the decree between the decree holder and the representative of the judgment debtor within the meaning of s 47 and it should be determined by the Court executing the decree (c) This coincides with the view taken by the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta under the Code of 1882 (d) According to the Madras and Allahabad decisions under that Code a decree against a Hindu father could not be executed against ancestral property in the hands of the sons even to the extent of the father s interest in the property and the only remedy of the decree holder was to institute a regular suit against the sons This view proceeded on the ground that the question whether the debts were tainted with immorality was not one that could be gone into in execution proceedings and that the sons were not the legal representatives of their father so far as the ancestral property was concerned within the meaning of s 234 of the Code of 1882 (e) These decisions are no longer law

2 Where a money decree has been passed against the father and the father dies after attachment but before sale of the ancestral property —All the High Courts are agreed that where the father dies after attachment of the ancestral property the proceedings in execution can be continued against the sons (f) In fact having regard to the provisions of the pres nt section a separate suit against the sons would be barred by s 47

3 Where a mortgage decree has been passed against the father and the father dies before sale of the mo tgaged property —Where a decree is obtained against the father for sale of ancestral property mortgaged by him and he dies before sale the proceedings in execution may be continued against the sons But the sons not being parties to the suit are entitled to raise in execution proceedings such questions as they could have raised if they had been made parties (g) They can dispute the factum of the debt or they can show that the debt was incurred for immoral purposes and is not therefore binding on the property (h) See notes to O 34 r 1 Mortgage of joint family property

4 Where a decree has been passed against the sons in respect of their father s debt for payment of the debt out of the ancestral property —In such a case the decree holder may proceed to execute the decree by attachment and sale of the ancestral property come to the hands of the sons The proceedings would be under s 52 The expression property of the deceased in that section would be construed in the light of the present section In fact s 53 is an Explanation to ss 50 and 52 explaining the meaning of the expression property of the deceased

It will be seen from what has been stated above that a creditor can now follow the property in the hands of the sons or grandsons in execution not only in cases (2) (3) and (4) but also in case (1)

Provided, thirdly, that, if the room is in the actual occupancy of a woman who is not the judgment debtor and who according to the customs of the country does not appear in public, the officers authorized to make the arrest shall give notice to her that she is at liberty to withdraw, and, after allowing a reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing may enter the room for the purpose of making the arrest

Provided, fourthly, that, where the decree in execution of which a judgment debtor is arrested, is a decree for the payment of money, and the judgment debtor pays the amount of the decree and the costs of the arrest to the officer arresting him, such officer shall at once release him

(2) The Local Government may by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any person or class of persons whose arrest might be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public shall not be liable to arrest in execution of a decree otherwise than in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed by the Local Government in this behalf

(3) Where a judgment debtor is arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money and brought before the Court the Court shall inform him that he may apply to be declared an insolvent, and that he may (w) be discharged if he has not committed any act of bad faith regarding the subject of the application and if he complies with the provisions of the law of insolvency for the time being in force

(4) Where a judgment debtor expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent and furnishes security, to the satisfaction of the Court that he will within one month so apply, and that he will appear when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested, the Court may (x) release him from arrest, and if he fails so to apply and to appear the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit him to civil prison in execution of the decree

See O 21 r 40 [proceedings on appearance of judgment debtor in obedience to notice or after arrest]

(w) The word may was substituted for will by Act 3 of 19 1

(x) The word may was substituted for shall by Act 3 of 19 1

Changes introduced by the section—This section corresponds with s 336 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

1 Any outer door of a dwelling house may now be broken open to effect the arrest of a judgment debtor in execution of a decree But the dwelling house must be in the occupancy of the judgment debtor See sub section (1) proviso (2)

2 The security under sub sec (4) must not only be for the filing by the judgment debtor of a petition in insolvency but also for his appearance when called upon in any proceeding upon the application in insolvency or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested See notes below Discharge of surety

3 A power has been conferred on the local Government to exempt certain persons from arrest See sub section (2)

Breaking open of outer door—Under the Code of 1882 the breaking open of any outer door of a dwelling house was strictly prohibited This prohibition has now been removed to this extent that where a dwelling house is in the occupancy of the judgment debtor and he refuses or prevents access thereto the officer authorized to make the arrest may break open any outer door of such dwelling house But this does not authorize him to break open the outer door of a dwelling house merely because the judgment debtor is to be found in that house The prohibition above referred to as well as the prohibition against entering a dwelling house after sunset for effecting an arrest are to be traced to the maxim of English law that a man s house is his castle Referring to this maxim Bentham wrote more than a century ago This poetical expression is certainly no reason for if a man s house be his castle by night why not by day ? The course of justice is sometimes interrupted in England by this puerile notion of liberty (y)

Sub section (2)—This sub section is new It is intended to cover the cases of certain persons or classes of persons whose summary arrest might as in the case of railway servants be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public

Sub section (4)—Insolvency after order for arrest—If a judgment debtor against whom an order for arrest has been made is adjudicated insolvent without a protection order the adjudication does not prevent his arrest and the Court of execution must require the judgment debtor to give security under the latter part of sub section (4) that he will appear when called upon in any proceeding in insolvency or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested (z)

Sub section (4)—Within one month—The Court has no power to extend the period of one month for applying for adjudication Sec 148 does not apply to such a case (a)

Sub section (4)—Discharge of surety—Under the Code of 1882 the security required was that the judgment debtor will appear when called upon and that he will within one month apply under section 336 to be declared an insolvent It was held upon the construction of those words that where a security bond provided that the surety would produce the judgment debtor when the Court should direct him to do so the surety was released from his obligation under the bond when the judgment debtor filed a petition to be declared an insolvent Neither the withdrawal of the petition nor failure to proceed with the petition nor even failure on the part of the judgment debtor to appear in Court when the direction to appear was made subsequent to the filing of the petition was held to affect the surety s discharge (b) And this was so even when a surety undertook that the judgment debtor would appear before the Court when called upon and would within one month file a petition to be declared an insolvent (c) These decisions are no longer law Sub section (4) now makes it clear that where a security bond is passed in the terms of that sub section that is where a surety undertakes (1) that the judgment debtor will within one month apply to be declared an insolvent and (2) will appear when called upon in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested the security will be realized when there is a failure to comply with either condition (d) The surety however is not released by the mere filing by the judgment debtor of the petition in insolvency the security continues until a final order is made on the petition (e)

A surety under this section is discharged by the death of the judgment debtor before breach of either of the two conditions mentioned above (f) But the death of the judgment debtor after the first condition has failed namely the undertaking to apply to be declared an insolvent within one month cannot affect the surety s liability with regard to that condition (g) A surety is also discharged if the execution proceedings are struck off (h) but not if liability had already accrued under the bond by a breach of either of the two conditions before the proceedings were struck off (i)

Sub sec (4) provides that if the judgment debtor fails to apply or to appear the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit the judgment debtor to prison This does not mean that the Court may proceed both against the surety and the judgment debtor for if the surety is proceeded against and the amount is recovered from him under the conditions of the bond then the judgment debtor cannot be committed to jail in execution and if the judgment debtor is committed to jail the state of affairs is just the same as if the surety had never come forward But the mere issue of a warrant against the judgment debtor the warrant remaining unexecuted is not sufficient by itself to discharge the surety (j)

Realization of security—See s 145

Security for costs—This section provides that a woman shall not be arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money At the same time if the plaintiff is a woman and her suit is for the payment of money she may be required to give security for the defendant s costs See O 25 r 1 (3)

57 [S 338] The Local Government may fix scales, graduated according to rank, race and nationality, of monthly allowances payable for the subsistence of judgment debtors

See O 21 r 39 [subsistence allowance]

58 [Ss 341, 342] (1) Every person detained in the civil prison in execution of a decree shall be so detained,—

Detention and release

(a) where the decree is for the payment of a sum of money exceeding fifty rupees, for a period of six months, and,

(b) in any other case, for a period of six weeks

Provided that he shall be released from such detention before the expiration of the said period of six months or six weeks, as the case may be,—

(i) on the amount mentioned in the warrant for his detention being paid to the officer in charge of the civil prison, or

(ii) on the decree against him being otherwise fully satisfied, or

(iii) on the request of the person on whose application he has been so detained or

(iv) on the omission by the person, on whose application he has been so detained, to pay subsistence allowance

Provided, also, that he shall not be released from such detention under clause (ii) or clause (iii) without the order of the Court

(2) A judgment debtor released from detention under this section shall not merely by reason of his release be discharged from his debt but he shall not be liable to be re arrested under the decree in execution of which he was detained in the civil prison

Period of detention in jail—The first part of sub section (1) up to the words six weeks corresponds with s 342 of the Code of 1882 The phraseology of that section however has now been altered to make it quite clear that the period of detention shall be (1) six months where the amount of the decree exceeds Rs 50 and (2) six weeks in any other case and that the Court has no power to fix shorter periods than those prescribed in the section (k)

(k) See S budhi v S ngi (1890) 13 Mad 141

Re arrest—The immunity of a judgment debtor from a second arrest depends not only upon his having been arrested but upon his having been detained in jail under the arrest Thus where a judgment debtor while acting as a pleader in Court was arrested and discharged on the ground that he was exempt from arrest under s 642 of the Code of 1882 (now s 135) it was held that he was liable to be re arrested in execution of the same decree against him (l) Similarly where a judgment debtor was arrested but was liberated owing to non payment of subsistence money it was held that he was liable to be re arrested in execution of the same decree (m) Sub section (2) refers to release from detention in jail

Interim protection order—A is arrested and committed to jail in execution of a decree against him While in jail he files his petition in insolvency and obtains an interim protection order for one week and is thereupon released from jail He then applies for a further protection order but his application is refused Is A liable to be re arrested in execution of the same decree? The Calcutta High Court has held that he is not liable to be re arrested on the ground that a judgment debtor once discharged from jail cannot be arrested a second time in execution of the same decree (n) On the other hand the High Court of Bombay has held that A is liable to be re arrested as the only cases in which a judgment debtor is exempt from re arrest are those specified in this section and that release under an interim protection order is not one of them (o) The Calcutta decision it is submitted is not correct

Contempt of Court—This section does not apply to cases of imprisonment for contempt of Court (p)

59 [S 653] (1) At any time after a warrant for the arrest of a judgment debtor has been issued the Court may cancel it on the ground of his serious illness

Release on ground of illness

(2) Where a judgment debtor has been arrested, the Court may release him if, in its opinion, he is not in a fit state of health to be detained in the civil prison

(3) Where a judgment debtor has been committed to the civil prison, he may be released therefrom—

(a) by the Local Government on the ground of the existence of any infectious or contagious disease, or

(b) by the committing Court, or any Court to which that Court is subordinate, on the ground of his suffering from any serious illness

(4) A judgment debtor released under this section may be re arrested but the period of his detention in civil prison shall not in the aggregate exceed that prescribed by section 58

(p) where the judgment debtor is a person liable for the payment of land revenue, any movable property which under any law for the time being applicable to him is exempt from sale for the recovery of an arrear of such revenue

Explanation —The particulars mentioned in clauses (g), (h), (i), (j), (l) and (o) are exempt from attachment or sale whether before or after they are actually payable

8 In cl (l) the words whether payable in moneys or in kind are new

9 The alterations in sub section (2) cl (a) correspond with the alterations in sub section (1) cl (c)

Subsequent amendments of the section —Sub sec (2) as it originally stood contained a clause (b) which ran thus (b) to affect the provisions of the Army Act or of any similar law for the time being in force That clause was repealed by Act 10 of 1914 Sch II See notes below Salary of Army officers

In clause (i) the word forty was substituted for twenty and the word eighty for forty by Act 26 of 1923

The proviso to clause (i) was added by the Amending Act 20 of 1925

Saleable property —Subject to the proviso to sub section (1) all saleable property which belongs to the judgment debtor may be attached and sold in execution of a decree against him The equity of redemption of a mortgagor in mortgaged pro perty is saleable property within the meaning of this section and is therefore liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree against him (r) The share of a partner in a partnership business is saleable property and can be attached and sold in execu tion of a decree obtained against him by his creditor (s) The right to claim specific performance of a contract to sell land is also attachable and saleable (t) A life interest in trust funds is attachable and saleable in execution of a decree against the life tenant (u) Similarly a vested remainder can be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the remainderman (v)

The word saleable in this section means saleable by auction at a compulsory sale under the orders of the Court It has no reference to property made non trans ferable by an agreement between the parties to a transaction It has accordingly been held that a condition in a permanent lease that the landlord would re enter if the tenant made any transfer of the land demised does not make the land unsaleable in execution The lease forbids a sale by the tenant but does not prevent a sale by the Court (w) Country liquor is saleable property within the meaning of this section though the permission of the Collector may be necessary to the sale under the Abkari Act (x)

Security for performance of duty —Money or other valuable security deposited as security for the due performance of duty by a servant with his master may be attached in execution of a decree against the servant but the attachment will be subject to the lien which the master has upon the deposit and the deposit cannot be sold until the same is at the disposal of the servant free from the lien of the master at the expiration of the period of employment (y)

Auctioneer —An auctioneer has no disposing power over the whole of the sale proceeds of goods sold by him but only over that portion of it which represents his commission Hence the whole of the sale proceeds in the hands of an auctioneer cannot be attached in execution of a decree against him but only so much of it as represents his commission (q)

Life policy —Where a married man effects a policy on his own life and the policy is expressed on the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife or of his wife and children or any of them then in cases to which the married Women s Property Act 1874 applies the simple declaration on the face of the policy that the policy is for the benefit of his wife or children amounts to a trust for them and the policy cannot be attached by his creditors [see s 6 of the Act] But in cases to which that Act does not apply such a declaration is not sufficient to create a trust and the insured has a disposing power over the policy for his own benefit and the policy may be attached by his creditors unless it has been assigned as provided by s 130 of the Transfer of Property Act 1822 or a trust has been declared in respect thereof as provided by s 5 of the Indian Trusts Act 1882 There was a conflict of opinion as to whether s 6 of the Act applied to Hindus for it was held by the High Court of Madras that it did (r) and by the High Courts of Bombay (s) and Calcutta (t) that it did not But the Act has now been amended [see Act 13 of 1923] and the provisions of that section are made applicable to policies of insurance effected by Hindus Muhammadans Sikhs or Jains in Madras after the 31st day of December 1913 [being the year of the Madras decision] and in other parts of British India after the 1st day of April 1923 but nothing contained in the Amending Act is to affect any right or liability which has accrued or been incurred under any decree of a competent Court passed before the 1st day of April 1923

Debts —Debts are expressly mentioned in the section and they are liable to attachment and sale A debt is an obligation to pay a liquidated (or specified) sum of money (u) Money that has not yet become due does not constitute a debt for there is no obligation to pay that which has not yet become due The word debt in this section means an actually existing debt that is a perfected and absolute debt Rent which has not become due is not a debt and cannot be attached (v) A sum of money which might or might not become due or the payment of which depends upon contingencies which may or may not happen is not a debt (w) A money claim that has already become due is a debt and it may be attached as such though it may be payable at a future day but a money claim accruing due is not a debt and cannot be attached The attachment must operate at the time of the attachment and not be anticipatory so as to fasten on a claim that may ripen into a debt at some future time (x) A mere right to receive profits the profits not having yet accrued due is not attachable (y)

tills the soil and cultivates it and not a large landed proprietor even though his sole income is from land (e) The Code of 1882 (s 266) exempted from attachment only the materials of houses occupied by agriculturists But it was held that even a house occupied by an agriculturist could not be attached provided it was occupied by an agriculturist as such (f) that is to say it was occupied by him bonâ fide for the purposes of agriculture (g) The burden of proving that it was so occupied lies on the agriculturist debtor and it must be proved by him in execution proceedings (h) The exemption extends after the death of the agriculturist to his representative occupying the house in good faith as an agriculturist (i) But if by a consent decree an agriculturist agrees in consideration of time being given to him that his house may be attached and sold on default in payment of the decretal amount the house may be attached and sold on default (j) for the privilege is one that may be waived (k)

If a house occupied by an agriculturist is specifically mortgaged it is not protected from sale in execution of a decree upon the mortgage Clause (c) does not prohibit the sale of property specifically mortgaged though it may be occupied by an agriculturist as such unless he is prohibited by law from mortgaging or selling it (l)

Clause (e) right to sue for damages — Mesne profits are in the nature of damages and the right to sue for mesne profits is a right to sue for damages Such a right cannot therefore be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the person entitled to the right Thus if A is entitled to claim mesne profits from B for wrongful dispossession of his lands A s right to claim mesne profits from B cannot be attached and sold in execution of a decree against A If the right is attached and sold and purchased by X X is not entitled to sue B for the mesne profits the sale to him being void (m)

Clause (f) right of personal service —A vritti is a right to receive certain emoluments as a reward for personal service and is therefore exempt from attachment and sale (n) But a priest s share in the utpat or net balance of the offerings to a deity may be attached and sold (o) The birt Maha brahmans or right to officiate as a priest at the funeral ceremonies of Hindus dying within a particular district is a right of personal service and cannot therefore be attached (p) Jatri bahis which merely contain the names and addresses of pilgrims who are clients of the judgment debtor and which are of use to him to perform personal service to the pilgrims are not attachable (q)

Political pensions —All pensions of a political nature payable directly by the Government of India are political pensions A pension which the Government of India has given a guarantee that it will pay by a treaty obligation contracted with another sovereign power is a political pension (s) Arrears of political pension due to a pensioner and lying in the hands of Government at the time of his death do not lose their character of political pension by reason merely of the pensioner s death The character of the funds remains unchanged so long as it remains unpaid in the hands of Government and it is not liable to attachment in the hands of Government in execution of a decree against the deceased But once the fund has passed out of the hands of Government into the hands of the legal representative of the deceased it may be attached like any other portion of the deceased s estate (t)

A grant of a Zamindari by Government as a reward for past services rendered by him to Government is not a pension but a gift and may therefore be attached in execution of a decree against the grantee The word pension in this section implies periodical payments of money by Government (u) Allowances granted to the Candyan pensioners of Ceylon (v) to the members of the family of the King of Oudh (w) to the members of the Mysore family (x) and to the descendants of the Nawab of Carnatic (y) or paid by a foreign State by an arrangement with the Government of India to a deposed Maharaja ( ) are instances of political pensions

Private pensions —Private pensions as distinguished from Government pensions are not exempt from attachment and they may be attached either as debts or as property belonging to the judgment debtor within the meaning of this section But they neither constitute debts nor property belonging to the judgment debtor until they have become due and payable Hence they cannot be attached before they have become due and payable Pensions granted by Railway Companies to their servants are private pensions (a)

Clause (h) allowances being less than salary of a public officer while absent from duty —This clause is new The allowances (being less than salary) of a public officer [s 2 (17)] while absent from duty are now wholly exempt from attachment Under the Code of 1882 it was held in the absence of any specific provision as to these allowances that they stood on the same footing as the salary of a public officer while on duty and were exempt from attachment only to the extent to which such salary was exempt and no more [see cl (i)] Thus where an officer was on sick leave on half pay which was Rs 150 it was held that the decree holder could attach Rs 75 (b) Under this clause the whole of Rs 150 is exempt from attachment

Clause (i) salary of public officer while on duty —The salary of a public officer [s 2 (17)] can be attached only partially except where it does not exceed Rs 40 monthly in which case the whole of it is exempt from attachment The object of the exemption appears to be to enable a public officer to maintain himself and his family in a position suitable to his rank This exemption did not occur in the Code of 1859 hence the salary of a public officer and of the other persons mentioned in this clause was attachable to the extent of the whole as debt And since it could only be attached as a debt it was not attachable until it had become due (c) Under the Codes of 1877 and 1882 and under the present Code the salary to the extent to which it is attachable

Salary of private servant—The salary of a private servant can be attached as a debt hence it cannot be attached before it has become due (f)

Clause (j) Indian Articles of War—The Indian Articles of War apply only to soldiers and followers of the Native Army see Act V of 1869 as amended by Act XII of 1894 Both these Acts have been repealed by the Indian Army Act 8 of 1911 and the reference to the Indian Articles of War in this clause must be read as referring to Act 8 of 1911 The pay of soldiers and followers of the Indian Army is under section of that Act exempt from attachment (g).

Clause (k) compulsory deposits in Provident Funds—The expression compulsory deposit is defined in s 2 (a) of the Provident Funds Act 19 of 1925 as being a subscription to or deposit in a Provident Fund which under the rules of the Fund is not until the happening of some specified contingency repayable on demand otherwise than for the purpose of the payment of premia in respect of a policy of life insurance and includes etc By s 3 of the Act it is provided that a compulsory deposit in any Government or Railway Provident Fund shall not be liable to attachment under any decree or order of any Civil Revenue or Criminal Court in respect of any debt of liability incurred by the subscriber or depositor A compulsory deposit cannot be attached so long as it retains the character of compulsory deposit A deposit which when it was made was a compulsory deposit continues to retain that character so long as it remains in the hands of the Railway Company It does not lose that character though the employee may have ceased to be in the service of the Company by retirement resignation or dismissal and though he may have become entitled in that event to be paid the amount due to his credit in the Provident Fund But once it is paid out by the Company on the happening of any of the above events it loses the character of compulsory deposit and it may be attached in the hands of the party to whom it has been paid (h) The same principle applies to the case of an optional subscriber who cannot under the rules demand payment of his deposits at his option (i)

Clause (l) wages of labourers—A labourer is a person who earns his daily bread by personal manual labour or in occupations which require little or no art skill or previous education Thus persons who agree to spin cotton and to receive a certain amount of money for a certain quantity of cotton spun by them are labourers and their wages cannot be attached (j)

Clause (m) expectancy of succession etc—The interest which a Hindu reversioner has in the immovable property of a deceased Hindu on the death of the deceased s widow is an expectancy of succession by survivorship in other words it is an interest expectant on the widow s death to which the reversioner could only succeed if he survived the widow (k) The interest in the pre empted property of a successful

Clause (n) right to future maintenance —If A is entitled to a monthly maintenance allowance under an agreement the allowance cannot be attached until after it has become due (n) It cannot be attached prospectively that is before it has become due (o) In other words arrears of maintenance may be attached but not the right to future maintenance A hereditary grant of an allowance of paddy out of the melwaram of certain land is not a right to future maintenance so as to be exempt from attachment under this section (p) Where a person holds villages under a deed which provides that he is to hold them and receive the profits in lieu of maintenance without power of transfer the interest of such person in the village is a right to future maintenance (q) But an annuity is not a right to future maintenance and it may be attached and sold (r) See note to s 51 Receiver of future maintenance

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

(a) to exempt houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the lands immediately appurtenant thereto and neces ary for their enjoyment) from attachment or sale in execution of decrees for rent of any such house building site or land or

(b) to affect the provisions of the Army Act or of any similar law for the time being in force

The italicized words and letters were replaced by the Repealing and Amending Act 10 of 1914 sch II

It is provided by s 136 of the Army Act 1881 [stat 44 and 45 Vict] amended by the Army (Annual) Act of 189 that the pay of an officer or soldier of His Majesty s Regular Forces serving in India shall be paid to him without deduction unless the Legis lature in India has directed to the contrary in that behalf Under section 60 of the Code as it stood before the amendment above referred to questions arose as to the extent of application of the Army Act As regards officers in the British Army it was held that they were officers of His Majesty s Regular Forces within the meaning of s 136 of the Army Act and that their salary therefore could not be attached at all (s) As regards officers in the Indian Army there was a conflict of decisions The High Courts of Calcutta and Madras (t) held that an officer in the Indian Army was not an officer of His Majesty s Regular Forces within the meaning of s 136 of the Army Act and that his salary therefore was liable to be attached to the extent mentioned in s 60 (1) (i) On the other hand it was held by the High Court of Bombay (u) relying on s 190 sub s (8) of the said Act that an officer in the Indian Army was an officer of His Majesty s Regular Forces and that his salary therefore could not be attached at all

Cl (b) of sub s (2) having been repealed the question arises whether the salary of an officer of His Majesty s Regular Forces can be attached under this section as salary of a public officer to the extent mentioned in cl (i) of sub s (1) It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (v) and Bombay (w) that it can be so attached. These cases must be distinguished from a Bombay case in which the question was whether the salary of a First Class Warrant Officer can be attached under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in execution of a decree for maintenance obtained against him by his wife It was held that it would not be attached under the Code The ground of the decision was that a First Class Warrant Officer was a soldier as defined by s 190 of the Army Act that under s 145 of the Act no execution can issue against his pay in respect of the maintenance of his wife but a specified sum may be deducted for such maintenance from his pay and that an order had already been made for such deduction by the Commander in Chief (x)

Objection that property not liable to attachment and sale when to be raised—A obtains a decree against B and applies for execution of the decree by attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B The property is attached and sold and purchased by C B then applies to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the property was not liable to attachment and sale Can the application be entertained? It has been held that if B was a party to the order for sale or was aware of it and did not appeal against it he is precluded from questioning the propriety of the order after the sale and he cannot therefore impeach the sale A judgment debtor who might have raised objections prior to the sale but who has refrained from doing so and who might have appealed against the ord r for sale has no right after the sale has been carried out to prefer an objection that the property sold was not legally saleable (y) But if B was not aware of the proceedings in attachment of the property or of the proceedings in connection with the sale thereof the application to set aside the sale may be entertained even after the sale is confirmed (z) The same rule applies where a sale effected by the Collector is sought to be set aside on the ground that the property was not ancestral and therefore could not legally be sold by the Collector (a)

Seizure of property in dwelling house

(2) No outer door of a dwelling house shall be broken open unless such dwelling house is in the occupancy of the judgment debtor and he refuses or in any way prevents access thereto, but when the person executing any such process has duly gained access to any dwelling house, he may break open the door of any room in which he has reason to believe any such property to be

(3) Where a room in a dwelling-house is in the actual occupancy of a woman who, according to the customs of the country, does not appear in public, the person executing the process shall give notice to such woman that she is at liberty to withdraw, and, after allowing reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, he may enter such room for the purpose of seizing the property, using at the same time every precaution, consistent with these provisions to prevent its clandestine removal

Changes introduced in the section —This section corresponds with s 271 of the Code of 1882 except that the prohibition against breaking open any outer door of a dwelling house has been relaxed where the dwelling house is in the occupancy of the judgment debtor See note to s 55 Breaking open of outer door

Dwelling house —A shop or a godown is not a dwelling house within the meaning of this section (b)

63 [S 285] (1) Where property not in the custody of any Court is under attachment in execution of decrees of more Courts than one the Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to invalidate any proceeding taken by a Court executing one of such decrees

Changes introduced in the section—This section corresponds with s 285 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

(1) The words is under attachment have been substituted for the words has been attached See notes below under the head Is under attachment

(2) Sub section (2) is new See notes below

Object of the section—The object of this section is to prevent different claims arising out of the attachment and sale of the same property by different Courts in other words it is to prevent confusion in the execution of decrees (c)

Application of the section—A attaches certain property in execution of a decree obtained by him against B in the Small Causes Court at Surat The same property is subsequently attached by C in execution of a decree obtained against B in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Surat The Court of the Subordinate Judge is a Court of higher grade than the Small Causes Court and it is therefore the proper Court under this section for deciding objections to the attachment for determining claims made to the property and for ordering the sale thereof and receiving the sale proceeds (d)

Sub section (2)—This sub section is new It declares in effect that a proceeding in execution shall not be deemed to be invalid merely because it was taken by a Court which having regard to sub section (1) ought not to have taken it Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions on the question whether the rule contained in s 285 of that Code [now sub sec (1)] was a rule of procedure only or whether it affected jurisdiction The High Courts of Calcutta (e) Bombay (f) and Madras (g) held that the rule was merely a rule of procedure and did not oust the jurisdiction of the inferior Court in proceedings in execution of its own decree On the other hand the High Court of Allahabad held that the section affected jurisdiction that is to say it took away the jurisdiction of the inferior Court in the several matters specified in the section (h) The result was that where a sale was effected by a Court of lower grade in a case where it ought to have been effected by a Court of higher grade the sale according to the Calcutta Bombay and Madras decisions was not for that reason invalid but according to the Allahabad decisions it was absolutely void as one made without jurisdiction Sub section (2) gives effect to the Calcutta Bombay and Madras decisions (i)

There is yet another point which may be considered in the form of an illustration A obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is attached by the Subordinate Judge s Court C obtains a decree against B in a District Court The same property is then attached by the District Court in execution of C s decree The property is sold by the Subordinate Judge in execution of A s decree although the proper Court to sell the property is the District Court and it is purchased by X Subsequently the same property is sold by the District Court in execution of C s decree and it is purchased by Y Which of the two purchasers has the better title? According to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Bykant Nath v Rajendro Narain (j) X the first purchaser would take an indefeasible title (1) if the sale was held by the Subordinate Judge s Court in ignorance of the attachment by the District Court and (2) the purchase was made by X without notice of the attachment by the District Court but if the sale was held by the Subordinate Judge s Court after notice of the attachment by the District Court or the property was purchased by X with notice of that attachment the purchase of X would be liable to be defeated by the purchase of Y According to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Abdul Karim v Thakordas (k) it is quite enough to give an indefeasible title to X if he purchased without notice of the attachment by the District Court The Bombay Court does not regard any notice which the inferior Court may have of the attachment by the superior Court as of any consequence for the simple reason that the jurisdiction of a Court cannot depend upon notice A similar view has been taken by the Madras High Court (l) Under the present section it seems X would take an indefeasible title to the property whether or not he or the Subordinate Judge s Court had notice of the attachment by the District Court

The result therefore is that where property is under attachment by two Courts of different grade and the property is sold by the Court of lower grade in contravention of the provisions of sub section (1) the sale is not thereby rendered invalid though the Court selling the property and the purchaser at the Court sale may be aware of the irregularity The course to be adopted by the Court of higher grade in such a case is to accept the sale made by the lower Court and to call for the proceeds of the sale and to distribute them rateably amongst all the decree holders (m) Where both the Courts are subordinate to the District Court the procedure according to the Bombay High Court (n) is for the party interested to apply to that Court to have the sale proceeds transferred to the Court of higher grade according to the Calcutta High Court (o) the Court of higher grade should move the District Court for that purpose In a recent case the Bombay High Court held that it is competent to the petitioner to apply to the Court of the higher grade for a transfer of the sale proceeds to that Court and that Court is competent to make the order (p)

If the same property is attached by a Munsiff and by a Subordinate Judge and is then sold by the Munsiff to X the sale is valid But if after the sale the decree holder in the Subordinate Judge s Court applies to that Court for sale the question arises whether X is entitled to apply to the Subordinate Judge under s 47 to stop the sale on the ground that the title to the property has passed to him According to the Madras High Court he is the reason given being that he is the representative of the judgment debtor within the meaning of s 47 (q) According to the Calcutta High Court he is not the reason given being that he is not the representative of the judgment debtor (r)

Is under attachment —These words have been substituted for the words has been attached to make it clear that the provisions of this section do not apply unless there are two or more attachments existing at the same time (s)

Decrees of more Courts than one —This section applies only as between Civil Courts of different grades or as between Revenue Courts of different grades It does not apply where one decree is that of a Civil Court and another that of a Revenue Court Hence where the same property is attached by a Civil Court and a Revenue Court and it is sold by the Revenue Court the purchaser is entitled to the property and it cannot be sold in execution of the decree of the Civil Court (t)

64 [S 276] Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment debtor of any debt, dividend or other moneys contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment

Private alienation of property after attachment to be void

Explanation —For the purposes of this section, claims enforceable under an attachment include claims for the rateable distribution of assets

Section 276 of the Code of 1882 was as follows —

When an attachment has been made by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid any private alienation of the property attached whether by sale gift mortgage or otherwise and any payment of the debt or dividend or a delivery of the share to the judgment debtor during the continuance of the attachment shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment

Changes introduced by the present section —The present section differs from the corresponding s 276 C P C 1882 in the following respects —

(1) The words by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid after the words where an attachment has been made in s 276 have been omitted as being mere surplusage (u) See notes below Where an attachment has been made

(2) The words during the continuance of the attachment which occurred in s 276 have been omitted and the words contrary to such attachment have been substituted for them See notes below Contrary to such attachment

(3) The explanation to the section is new See notes below Explanation to the section etc

Object of the section — A sues B for Rs 5 000 B owns a house worth Rs 5 000 and he has no other property B may sell or mortgage the house notwithstanding the institution of the suit against him and he may sell or mortgage it even after a decree has been passed against him in the suit and the sale or mortgage in either case will be perfectly valid and pass a good title to the transferee (v) But if the property is attached

in execution of the decree any private transfer of the property by B contrary to such attachment shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment The object of the section is to prevent fraud on decree holders (u) and to secure intact the rights of the attaching creditor against the attached property by prohibiting private alienations pending attachm nt (x)

Where an attachment has been made —An attachment to render a subsequent alienation invalid must be made in the manner prescribed by the Code Thus a promissory note must be attached by actual seizure as provided by O 21 r 51 and not by the issue of a prohibitory order The mere issue of a prohibitory order does not amount to an attachment within the meaning of this section (y) Similarly in the case of immovable property the attachment to render a subsequent alienation invalid must be made in the manner prescribed by O 21 r 54 (z) An attachment made under that rule operates as a valid prohibition against alienation from the date on which the necessary proclamation is made and a copy of the order of attachment is affixed as provided by that rule and not from the date of the order of attachment (a) In Muthia Chetti v Palaniappi (b) Lord Shaw said — A fasciculus of clauses beginning at O 21 r 41 and applicable to attachment of property shows instance after instance that attachment is a real thing with a variety of real applications suited to the nature of the property to be attached These instanc s go to show that under the Civil Procedure Code in India the most anxious provisions are enacted in order to prevent a mere order of a Court from effecting attachment and plainly indicating that the attachment itself is something eparate from the mere order and is something which i to be done and effected before attachment can be declared to have been accomplished Their Lordships need not repeat in another form these propositions The order is one thing the attachment is another No property can be declared to be attached unless first the order for attachment has been issued and secondly in execution of that order the other things prescribed by the rules in the Code have been done

Attachment before judgment —An alienation of property made after attachment before judgment is void to the same extent as an alienation made after attachment under a decree (c) The attachment however must be made in the manner prescribed by the Code and in the ca e of immovable property as prescribed by O 21 r 54 (d) The High Court of Madras has held that an alienation of property after it is attached pursuant to an order for attachment before judgment is void under this section even though the property was not actually attached until after the pa sing of the decree (e) but this deci sion is of doubtful authority See Notes above Where an attachment has been made

Private transfer —The expression private transfer means a voluntary sale gift or mortgage in contravention of the attachment and not the enforced execution of a conveyance or assignment in obedience to a decree of a Court competent to pass it (f) The decree may be one on an award (g) Releasing an easement by the dominant owner to the servient owner is a transfer within the meaning of this section (h)

Contract for sale—A contract of sale entered into before attachment does not create any interest or charge on the property which can prevail over the attachment (i)

A private transfer under this section is not absolutely void that is void as against all the world (j) but void only as against claims enforceable under the attachment —

(1) In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property belonging to B is attached During the pendency of the attachment B mortgages the prop rty to C The property is then sold in execution of the decree and purchased by D Here the mortgage having been made contrary to the attachment is void as against A s claim and D is entitled to take the property free from the mortgage created by B (k) This illus tration shows the operation of the section See note below Private sale of property attached to decree holder

(2) B s property is attached in execution of a decree obtained by A against him While the attachment is pending B sells the property to C and pays out of the sale proceeds the amount of the decree into Court and the attachment thereupon ceases [see O 21 r 55] The sale to C is valid the decree having been satisfied by payment into Court and there being no claim outstanding which is enforceable under the attachment (l) Moreover an alienation by means of which the decree in execution of which the attachment was made is satisfied can scarcely be regarded as an alienation contrary to the attachment (m)

(3) On the same principle where A attaches B s property in execution of a decree obtained by him against B and applications are thereafter made by other decree holders C D and E for rateable distribution without attaching the property in execution of their decrees and subsequently B sells the property to F and pays off A (the attaching creditor) the other decree holders namely C D and E are not entitled to question the aliena tion to F In the first place the alienation can hardly be said to be an alienation contrary to the attachment within the meaning of this section for the alienation was the means by which the decree in execution of which the attachment was made was satisfied In the next place it cannot be said that the claims of C D and E are claims for the rateable distribution of assets within the meaning of the Explanation to the section for to bring s 73 [which provides for rateable distribution] into play certain conditions are necessary and one of them is that there should be assets held by the Court In the case now under consideration no assets came into the hands of the Court at all Therefore C D and E are not entitled to question the alienation by B to F and the alienation is perfectly valid (m1)

(4) A decree holder though entitled to rateable distribution as contemplated by the Explanation to the section is not entitled to question a private alienation under this section unless his claim be one enforceable under the attachment within the meaning of this section The attachment referred to in this section is the attachment under which the execution sale is made Therefore a claim enforceable under the attachment means a claim enforceable under the attachment under which the execution sale is made (n) A claim under any other attachment is not a claim enforceable under the attachment within the meaning of this section The result is that—if A obtains a decree against B and B s property is attached in execution of the decree and

B subsequently alienates the property to C and the property is thereafter attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained by D against B and it is purchased by F

and C sues F for possession

C s title is to be preferred to F s title and C is entitled to possession of the property D cannot object to the alienation to C for the alienation to C was prior to his attachment Nor is A entitled to question the alienation for the sale in execution was not made under his attachment but under D s attachment The sale having been made under D s attachment A s claim cannot be said to be a claim enforceable under the attachment within the meaning of this section The result would be the same even if we substitute A for D that is even if the decree hoder in both cases was the same person This is the effect of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mina Kumari v Bijoy Singh (o) a case under s 276 of the Code of 1882 which did not contain the Explanation which now occurs at the end of the present section But the decision proceeded on the assumption that Sorabji v Govind (p) considered in the notes below was good law an assumption which involved the proposition now quoted in the Explanation Mina Kumari s case therefore would also govern cases under the present section

If in the case put above the property was sold by the Court under A s attachment instead of D s and D had applied for execution before the Court received the proceeds of the sale the alienation to C would be void it being contrary to A s attachment and further D would be entitled to rateable distribution under s 73

The attaching decree holder may agree with a purchaser of the property from the judgment debtor pending the attachment that he will not bring the property to sale in execution of his decree Such an agreement has the effect of rendering the alienation valid as against the attaching creditor (q)

Contrary to such attachment —These words have been substituted for the words during the continuance of the attachment which occurred in s 276 of the Code of 1882 The words during the continuance of the attachment were too wide in that they comprised alienations that could not possibly prejudice the rights of an attaching creditor as where property is mortgaged by A to B and the equity of redemption is subsequently attached at the instance of C in execution of a decree obtained by C against A and pending the attachment the mortgage is transferred by B and A to D In such a case the transfer of mortgage though made during the continuance of the attachment cannot prejudice C the attaching creditor for the effect of the transfer is merely to substitute D for B But the transfer having been made during the continuance of the attachment it came literally within the old section 2 6 though it was not contrary to the attachment and it was accordingly contended in a case before the Judicial Committee under s 276 that the transfer was void as against C But this contention was overruled Their Lordships held that the object of s 2 6 was merely to prohibit alienations contrary to the attachment and that an alienation such as the above by B and A to D cannot in any sense be said to be contrary to the attachment (r) The words contrary to the attachment have now been substituted for the words during the continuance of the attachment and they give effect to the Privy Council ruling noted above. Similarly a renewal though pending the attachment of a mortgage already existing on the property is not a transfer contrary to the attachment. But if the amount secured by the renewed mortgage exceeds the amount due under the original mortgage at the date of the attachment the additional security is to that extent void (s).

Explanation to the section: Claims for rateable distribution of assets under s 73 are claims enforceable under an attachment within the meaning of this section.—The Explanation to the section is new. A obtains a decree against B and in execution of the decree attaches Rs 7 000 belonging to B in the hands of a Railway Company. B then assigns the said sum in the hands of the Railway Company to his attorneys for costs due to them subject to A's attachment. After the assignment C another creditor of B obtains a decree against B and in execution of his decree attaches the said sum in the hands of the Railway Company. Thereafter the Company pays the said sum to the Sheriff of Bombay. The assignment by B to his attorneys though made prior to C's attachment is void as against C's claim for C's claim is a claim for rateable distribution of assets [Rs 7 000] within the meaning of s 73 and therefore a claim enforceable under the attachment of A by virtue of the Explanation to this section. C is therefore entitled to be paid in priority to B's attorneys. This is the law under the present Code and it is in accordance with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Sorabji v Govind (t) decided under s 276 of the Code of 1882. The view taken by the other High Courts was that C's claim being a claim merely for rateable distribution cannot be said to be a claim enforceable under the attachment but this view is no longer law (u). The Explanation gives effect to the Bombay decision. But the Explanation does not apply unless the claim of the subsequent decree holder can be said to be a claim for rateable distribution within the meaning of s 73. Now the essential condition of enforcement of claims for rateable distribution under s 73 is that there should be assets held by the Court [see s 73 below] and that condition was satisfied in Sorabji v Govind. But if there be no assets received by the Court as would be the case if no payment was made by the Railway Company to the Sheriff and A's attachment came to an end [O 21 r 55] by B satisfying A's decree out of Court and then certifying it to the Court under O 21 r 2 C's claim cannot be enforced as a claim for rateable distribution and the assignment to the attorneys will prevail over any claim that may be made by C under his subsequent attachment (v). The Explanation to the section protects only those decree holders who are entitled to rateable distribution under s 73 and no decree holder can be entitled to rateable distribution under that section unless there are assets held by the Court (w). At the same time it must be noted that it is not enough that a decree holder is entitled to rateable distribution under s 73 to bring the Explanation into play; it is also necessary that his claim must be one enforceable under the attachment within the meaning of the present section (x): see ill (4) on p 208 above. The result is that a decree holder is not entitled to the benefit of the Explanation and is not entitled to question a private alienation unless—

(1) he is entitled to rateable distribution under s 73 for which it is absolutely necessary that there should be assets held by the Court and

(2) where there has been a sale in execution his claim is one enforceable under the attachment under which the sale was made as explained in ill (4) under note A private transfer under this section etc

As regards the first condition it is obvious that it cannot be present if the judgment debtor satisfies the claim of the decree holder out of Court and that is what happened in the undermentioned cases (y) In the Privy Council case of Mina Kumari v Bijoy Singh ( ) the first condition was satisfied or assumed to be satisfied but the second condition was not

Private transfer under O 21 r 83—The High Court of Bombay has held that a private transfer of his property by a judgment debtor made pursuant to the provisions of O 21 r 83 is absolute notwithstanding the provisions of this section even against claims enforceable under the attachment (a) The contrary has been held by the Madras High Court (b)

Attachment raised and subsequently restored—Where the property of a defendant is attached and the attachment is subsequently raised by the executing Court but the attachment is restored by the High Court on appeal the order of the High Court relates back to the date when the attachment was first made with the result that an alienation of the property made by the judgment debtor between the date on which the attachment was raised and that on which it was restored is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment (c) The same principle applies where the property attached is released from attachment and subsequently re attached by the same Court in execution of the same decree (d)

Private sale to decree holder—A obtains a decree against B In execution of the decree B s property is attached Pending the attachment B sells the property to C A then buys the same property from B Is the sale to C void under this section? No because A bought the property not at a Court sale but by private treaty with B The title obtained by the purchaser on a private sale of property in satisfaction of a decree differs from that acquired upon a sale in execution Under a private sale the purchaser derives title through the vendor and cannot acquire a title better than his Under an execution sale the purchaser notwithstanding that he acquires merely the right title and interest of the judgment debtor acquires that title by operation of law adversely to the judgment debtor and freed from all alienations and incumbrances effected by him after the attachment of the property sold (e)

Effect of striking off execution proceedings or of removing them from the file—An attachment is not necessarily at an end because the execution case is struck off or removed from the file The effect of such a proceeding depends on the circumstances of each case Where after an attachment has been made the proceedings in execution are struck off or removed from the file under circumstances which render a fresh attachment necessary to bring the judgment debtor s property to sale a private transfer of the property by the judgment debtor made after the proceedings are struck off is valid though the same property may subsequently be re attached in execution of the same decree on a fresh application for execution But if the execution proceedings are struck off or removed from the file under circumstances which do not render a fresh attachment necessary the transfer is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment and the mere fact that a fresh application for attachment is subsequently made in execution of the same decree will not render the transfer valid The reason is that in the former case the proceedings in execution are deemed to have terminated on their being struck off or removed from the file and the attachment s deemed to be at an end and the transfer having been made after the termination of the attachment it cannot be affected by the subsequent attachment In the latter case however the proceedings in execution are merely suspended and the first attachment is therefore deemed to subsist and the second application for attachment is a superfluity (f) Whether the execution proceedings have been struck off or removed from the file under these or those circumstances is a question of fact in each case (g) But where a fresh application for attachment is made the presumption is that the first attachment has ceased and the burden of proof is on the party alleging that the first attachment was still subsisting when the second application was made and that the second application was superfluous (h) B s property is attached in execution of a decree obtained against him by A The execution proceedings are then struck off B then sells the property to C The property is again attached on a fresh application by A Is the sale valid ? There being a fresh application for attachment the presumption is that the first attachment ceased from the moment the proceedings were struck off The ale would therefore be valid and the second attachment inoperative unless A showed that the first attachment was still subsisting at the date of transfer and that the second application was superfluous

The above cases would not have arisen if the Courts instead of making an order for striking off proceedings or removing proceedings from the file had made an order either dismissing the application or adjourning the proceedings where the Court was by reason of default on the part of the decree holder unable to proceed further with the proceedings in execution The practice of striking off proceedings or removing proceedings from the file had no justification under any of the previous Codes To put a stop to this practice it is now expressly provided by O 21 r 57 that where any property has been attached in execution of a decree but by reason of the decree holder s default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a further date upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease Cases like the above are not likely to ari e under this Code if the procedure prescribed by O 21 r 57 is strictly followed

Attachment does not create a charge —Attachment creates no charge or lien upon the attached property (i) It merely prevents and avoids private alienations it does not confer any title on the attaching creditors (j) There is nothing in any of the provisions of the Code which in terms makes the attaching creditor a secured creditor or creates any charge or lien in his favou over the property attached (k) But an attaching creditor acquires by virtue of the attachment a right to have the attached property kept in custodia legis for the satisfaction of his debt and an unlawful interference with that right constitutes an actionable wrong Thus it is an actionable wrong if A cuts and carries away crops attached by B in execution of a decree against C and a suit will lie at B s instance against A to recover from A damages which should not however exceed the value of the attached property (l)

Effect of order of adjudication on attachment—Where a judgment debtor has been adjudicated an insolvent the whole of his property vests in the Official Assignee What is the effect of an order of adjudication on an attachment levied prior to the date of the adjudication order? Has the attaching creditor by reason of his prior attachment priority over the Official Assignee in respect of the property attached by him prior to the date of the adjudication order or is the Official Assignee entitled to claim the attached property by virtue of the adjudication order as part of the property of the insolvent? It has been held that whether the attachment is one before judgment (m) or in execution of a decree (n) the attaching creditor has no priority over the Official Assignee and the latter is entitled to the attached property for the benefit of the creditors of the insolvent including the attaching creditors These decisions are based on the ground that an attaching creditor does not obtain a charge or lien on the attached property Once the order of adjudication is made the attaching creditor and other creditors of the insolvent stand on the same footing and they are entitled to a rateable distribution out of the property of the insolvent in the hands of the Official Assignee In execution of a decree obtained by A against B property belonging to B is attached B is subsequently adjudicated an insolvent As a result of adjudication the property vests in the Official Assignee for the benefit of B s creditors See Presidency Towns Insolvency Act 1909 s 53 and Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 s 51

Effect of winding up order on attachment—The position of the liquidator of a registered company differs from that of the Official Assignee in that the property of the company does not vest in him An attachment therefore made on the property of the company at the instance of a decree holder before the winding up of the company cannot be released at the instance of the liquidator (o)

date of the confirmation of the sale and so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them the title to the property sold shall vest in the purchaser from the date of such certificate and not before

Provided that the decree under which the sale took place was still subsisting at that date

The first part of section 316 now stands as O 21 r 94 with slight verbal alterations The second part with certain substantial alterations to be presently noted stands as s 65 The proviso to s 316 has been omitted altogether

Changes introduced in the section —Under s 316 of the Code of 1882 the title to immovable property sold at an execution sale vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale that is the date on which the sale became absolute Under the present section the title to such property where the sale has become absolute vests in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute

The proviso to s 316 has been omitted It is therefore no longer necessary that the decree should be subsisting at the time of the confirmation of sale

Vesting of property in auction purchaser —In the case of a private sale of immovable property the property vests in the purchaser from the time when the deed of sale is executed The reason is that a voluntary sale becomes absolute on execution and delivery of the deed by the vendor In the case however of a Court sale, the property does not vest in the purchaser immediately on the sale thereof The reason is that a compulsory sale does not become absolute until some time after the sale A period of at least thirty days must expire from the date of sale before the sale can become absolute During that period the sale is liable to be set aside at the instance of the judgment debtor on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale or on deposit by him in Court of the amount specified in the sale proclamation together with a percentage on the purchase money by way of compensation to the purchaser [O 21 rr 89 90] The application by the judgment debtor to set aside the sale in either of these two cases must be made within 30 days from the date of sale Where no such application is made the Court must make an order confirming the sale and it is upon such confirmation that the sale becomes absolute [O 21 r 92] After the sale has become absolute a certificate is granted by the Court to the purchaser which is called a certificate of sale [O 21 r 94] Such certificate bears as date the day on which the sale became absolute It is only when the sale becomes absolute that the property sold vests in the purchaser (p) But though the property does not vest in the purchaser until the sale has become absolute when it does vest in him it shall be deemed to have vested on the sale becoming absolute from the time when it was sold The vesting of the property is thus made to relate back to the date of sale (q)

Successive purchasers at sales in execution of money decrees —Under the Code of 1882 s 316 the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale and not before This gave rise to some difficulty when the question arose as to which of two successive auction purchasers should have priority in cases where the later purchaser had the certificate of sale issued to him first Had the question been determined with exclusive reference to the terms of that section the priority would have rested with the purchaser who first procured the certificate of sale But this inequitable result was avoided and the difficulty was got over by holding that the first purchaser had by his prior purchase obtained an equitable interest in the property and that the subsequent purchaser must be deemed to have purchased the property subject to such

But where property is sold in execution of a decree to P1 and the sale is et aside on the ground of irregularity under O 21 r 90 and the same property is sub equently sold in execution of another decree and is purchased by P2 P2 is entitled to priority as against P1 even though the sale to P1 may subsequently be confirmed The sale to P1 not having been confirmed until after the sale to P2 P1 is not entitled to priority over P2 Even under the Code of 1882 P1 would not be entitled to priority over P2 for the sale to him (P1) having been set aside it could not be said that P2 purchased subject to P1 s interest in the property P1 had no interest in the property when it was sold to P2 (s)

Suit for possession by auction purchaser —It was held under the Code of 1859 that a purchaser of immovable property at a Court sale could not maintain a suit for possession thereof against a third person unless he had a certificate of sale issued to him before suit although the sale had become ab olute The reason given was that the transfer of property to a purcha er at a Court sale was not complete until a certificate of sale was issued to him The decisions turned upon the language of s 259 which provided that the certificate shall be taken and deemed to be a valid transfer of such right title and interest as had passed from the judgment debtor to the purchaser The line of reasoning adopted was that if a certificate was to be taken as a tran fer the tran action must neces arily be incomplete until the certificate was issued The said words were construed as controlling the operation of s 2[illegible] which provided that a sale became absolute when it was confirmed by the Court (u) But it was held that as again t the judgment debtor and his representatives the purchaser s title became compl te on the confirmation of the sale (v) Under the present section it seems that an auction purchaser can maintain a suit for possession even against a per on not a party to the suit after the sale is confirmed by the Court though no certificate has been i sued to him before the institution of the suit provided it is produced at or before the pa ing of the decree The reason is that property under the pre ent section ve ts in the purchaser

date of the confirmation of the sale and so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them the title to the property sold shall vest in the purchaser from the date of such certificate and not before

The first part of section 316 now stands as O 21 r 94 with slight verbal alterations The second part with certain substantial alterations to be presently noted stands as s 65 The proviso to s 316 has been omitted altogether

Changes introduced in the section —Under s 316 of the Code of 1882 the title to immovable property sold at an execution sale vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale that is the date on which the sale became absolute Under the present section the title to such property where the sale has become absolute vests in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute

immediately the sale is confirmed by the Court and the vesting is not postponed until the grant of a certificate In a case under the Code of 1859 where the equity of redemption of the judgment debtor was sold it was held that the purchaser was entitled to sue the mortgagee for redemption even before the issue of the certificate the reason given being that the suit was not one in ejectment on title, but one for redemption and therefore of an equitable nature and the purchaser was equitably entitled to redeem The certificate in that case was produced at the hearing (w)

Mesne profits —Under the Code of 1882 the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the sale certificate and not before Hence it was held that the purchaser was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the certificate and not from the date of sale (x) Under the present section the property is to be deemed to vest in the purchaser from the date of sale The purchaser therefore is entitled to mesne profits from the date of sale (y)

Title of auction purchaser —Under the Code of 1882, property sold in execution of a decree vested in the purchaser so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them That is to say a purchaser at a Court sale was entitled to hold the property only against the judgment debtor and his representative but not against third parties The words italicized above which occurred in s 316 of the Code of 1882 have been omitted in the present section The omission however has not the effect of enlarging the purchaser s rights and a purchaser at a judicial sale will now as before get a good title only against persons bound by the decree but not against strangers (z)

Sale when void and when voidable —A sale in execution of a decree is void if the Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property Thus a Court has no jurisdiction to sell property in execution of a decree if the notice required by O 21 r 22 is not served (a) Similarly a Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of a person who was not a party to the suit in which the property was sold or properly represented on the record (b) Again the Court of first instance has no jurisdiction to sell property after an order is made by the appellate Court for stay of execution (c) In each of these cases the sale is a nullity and may be disregarded without any proceeding to set it aside (d)

But where a Court has jurisdiction to sell the property and there has been an irregularity in the course of execution proceedings the sale is not void but merely voidable Thus where the notice required by O 21 r 22 is served upon a person who was not in fact the legal representative of the deceased judgment debtor but whom the Court wrongly held to be his legal representative the sale is voidable and not void (e) Similarly a sale is voidable and not void if there has been material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale [O 21 r 90]

Irregularities of procedure in obtaining decrees or in execution proceedings — Provided that the Court has jurisdiction to sell a purchaser at a Court sale is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the decree or of the order for sale To hold that a purchaser at a sale in execution is bound to inquire into such matters would throw a great impediment in the way of purchasers under executions If the Court has jurisdiction a purchaser is no more bound to inquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he is as to the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues (f) Strangers to a suit are justified in believing that the Court has done that which by the direction of the Code it ought to do (g) Therefore when property sold in execution of a decree under the order of a competent Court is purchased by a stranger bona fide and for value the sale cannot be set aside on the ground that the judgment debtor had a cross decree of a higher amount and the Court therefore ought not to have directed the sale (h) or that the decree had been satisfied out of Court before the sale (i) or that the Court wrongly held that the defendant was served with the summons and on that finding passed an ex parte decree against him (j) or that though an attachment was subsisting at the date of the sale the decree holder s application for an order of sale had been dismissed for want of prosecution before sale (k) or that the property was not liable to attachment and sale within the meaning of s 60 (l) or that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation (m) or that the decree proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law (n) or that the decree was one which the Court ought not to have passed (o) See notes to s 60 Objection that property not liable to attachment and sale when to be raised on p 202 above notes to O 21 r 22 Consequence of omission to give notice and Notice to wrong person and notes to O 21 r 90 Material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale

The above principles apply in favour of a third party purchasing at a Court sale They do not apply where the decree holder himself is the purchaser The reason is that where the decree holder himself is the purchaser he must be held to have had notice of all the facts relating to the suit and execution proceedings (p) Nor do they apply in favour of a party to the suit though he may not be a decree holder (q)

Effect of reversal of decree upon sale where decree reversed after confirmation of sale—There is a great distinction between decree holders who come in and purchase under their own decree which is afterwards reversed or modified and bona fide purchasers who come in and buy at a sale in execution of the decree to which they are no parties and at a time when that decree is a valid and subsisting decree and when the order for sale is a valid order A bona fide purchaser who is a stranger to the decree does not lose his title to the property by the subsequent reversal or modification of the decree But where the decree holder himself is the purchaser the sale may be set aside if the decree is subsequently reversed or modified Where the purchaser is a stranger the judgment debtor whose property is sold is entitled only to the sale proceeds of the property if the decree is subsequently reversed But where the purchaser is the decree holder he is bound to restore the property to the judgment debtor (r) A sale in execution of a decree at which a third party becomes the purchaser is upheld notwithstanding the subsequent reversal of the decree because otherwise there will be less inducement to intending

issues (f) Strangers to a suit are justified in believing that the Court has done that which by the direction of the Code it ought to do (g) Therefore when property sold in execution of a decree under the order of a competent Court is purchased by a stranger bona fide and for value the sale cannot be set aside on the ground that the judgment debtor had a cross decree of a higher amount and the Court therefore ought not to have directed the sale (h) or that the decree had been satisfied out of Court before the sale (i) or that the Court wrongly held that the defendant was served with the summons and on that finding passed an ex parte decree against him (j) or that though an attachment was subsisting at the date of the sale the decree holder s application for an order of sale had been dismissed for want of prosecution before sale (k) or that the property was not liable to attachment and sale within the meaning of s 60 (l) or that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation (m) or that the decree proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law (n) or that the decree was one which the Court ought not to have passed (o) See notes to s 60 Objection that property not liable to attachment and sale when to be raised on p 202 above notes to O 21 r 2 Consequence of omission to give notice and Notice to wrong person and notes to O 21 r 90 Material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale

The above principles apply in favour of a third party purchasing at a Court sale They do not apply where the decree holder himself is the purchaser The reason is that where the decree holder himself is the purchaser he must be held to have had notice of all the facts relating to the suit and execution proceedings (p) Nor do they apply in favour of a party to the suit though he may not be a decree holder (q)

Effect of reversal of decree upon sale where decree reversed after confirmation of sale—There is a great distinction between decree holders who come in and purchase under their own decree which is afterwards reversed or modified and bona fide purchasers who come in and buy at a sale in execution of the decree to which they are no parties and at a time when that decree is a valid and subsisting decree and when the order for sale is a valid order A bona fide purchaser who is a stranger to the decree does not lose his title to the property by the subsequent reversal or modification of the decree But where the decree holder himself is the purchaser the sale may be set aside if the decree is subsequently reversed or modified Where the purchaser is a stranger the judgment debtor whose property is sold is entitled only to the sale proceeds of the property if the decree is subsequently reversed But where the purchaser is the decree holder he is bound to restore the property to the judgment debtor (r) A sale in execution of a decree at which a third party becomes the purchaser is upheld notwithstanding the subsequent reversal of the decree because otherwise there will be less inducement to intending purchasers to buy at an execution sale and consequently less chance of property fetching proper value at such sales (s) See notes to s 144 Who may apply for restitution. But where property sold in execution of a decree is bought by the decree holder and it is subsequently re sold by him to a bonâ fide purchaser for value such purchaser acquires a good title though the decree may be subsequently reversed (t)

Effect of reversal of decree upon sale where decree reversed before confirmation of sale —On referring to s 316 of the Code of 1882 (p 213) it will be observed that it contained a proviso the effect whereof was stated to be that a sale could not be confirmed if at the time of application for confirmation the decree under which the sale was effected had ceased to be a subsisting decree (u) That proviso has not been reproduced in the present section Under the present section therefore a sale held in execution of a decree may be confirmed in any event where the purchaser is a third party though the decree has been reversed before confirmation of the sale See O 21 r 92 (1) and note the words the Court shall make an order confirming the sale

Suit against purchaser not maintainable on ground of purchase being on behalf of plaintiff

66 [S 317] (1) No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims

(2) Nothing in this section shall bar a suit to obtain a declaration that the name of any purchaser certified as aforesaid was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser, or interfere with the right of a third person to proceed against that property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, on the ground that it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner

Changes introduced by the section —

1 The words no suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court have been substituted for the words no suit shall be maintained a certified purchaser which occurred in the corresponding section (s 317) of the Code of 1882

2 The words on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims have been substituted for the words on behalf of any other person or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims See notes below Joint purchase

3 The latter part of sub section (2) is new See notes below under the head Suit by a third person for a declaration that the certified purchaser is merely a benamidar

Benami purchases—The object of the section is to put a stop to benami purchases at execution sales (v). If A under a secret understanding with B purchases property with his own money but in B's name, the purchase is said to be benami. In such a case B is merely a benamidar or ostensible owner; he holds the property in trust for A and A may compel him to transfer the property to him (A). If however A's object in purchasing the property in B's name was to defraud his creditors and the object of the fraud is carried out, the Court will not assist A in recovering possession of the property from B; but if the object of the fraud is not carried out, the Court will assist A in recovering possession of the property from B notwithstanding A's primary intention to effect a fraud. This is the law as applicable to benami purchases at a private sale (w). The law, however, is different as to benami purchases at a Court sale. If A purchases property in B's name at a Court sale and a certificate of sale is issued to B (O 21 r 94), B will be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser as against A, and no suit will lie under this section by A against B for possession of the property unless A can prove that B's name was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without his consent [see sub-section (2)]. The same rule applies even if the claim made by the beneficial owner is not for the whole of the property of which the defendant is the certified purchaser. Thus if B is the certified purchaser of certain property, part of which was purchased by him on his own account and part benami for A, A is not entitled to maintain a suit under this section for recovery of the part purchased by B benami for him (x). The mere fact, however, that the plaintiff has described the defendant as a benamidar does not make the transaction benami if it was not benami in fact; it is a mere misdescription, and it is no ground for refusing the plaintiff a relief to which he is otherwise entitled (y).

Section must be construed strictly—Where a transaction is once made out to be benami, the Courts of India which are bound to decide according to equity and good conscience will deal with it in the same manner as it would be treated by an English Court of equity (z). That is to say, effect will be given to the real and not to the nominal title unless the result of doing so would be to work a fraud upon innocent persons (a). The present section provides that when property is sold at a Court sale, no suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made benami. It provides in effect that the certified purchaser shall be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser, and shall not be liable to be ousted on the ground that his purchase was really made on behalf of another. In other words, the provisions of the present section bar the equitable jurisdiction of the Courts. The section therefore must be construed strictly and not extended beyond its express terms. But though the section prohibits suits against the certified purchaser to assert a benami title against him, it does not make benami purchases illegal. The object of the stringent provisions of this section is to discourage benami purchases at Court sale, but not to render such purchases illegal (b).

Scope of the section—The section refers to execution sales only and has no application to a sale held by a receiver (c).

Whether section retrospective—The High Court of Calcutta has held that this section does not apply if the sale was held and confirmed before January 1 1909 when the pre ent Code came into force and that the section applicable is sec 317 of the Code of 1882 (d) But if the sale was held before but confirmed after that date the present section applies for the title of the execution purchaser cannot be said to have been perfect until the confirmation of the sale (e) It is submitted that even if the sale was confirmed before January 1 1909 this section would apply to the case and not sec 317 (f)

Suits outside the section—This section provides that no suit shall lie against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purcha e was made on behalf of the plaintiff In other words it is only in suits against the certified purchaser as defendant that such purchaser is to be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser But if the real owner is actually and honestly in possession and a suit is brought by the certified purchaser as plaintiff against the real owner for possession or for rents and profits of the property of which he is the certified purchaser the real owner may resist the suit on the ground that the certified purchaser was only a benamidar (g) And since the section only bars suits against the certified purchaser as defendant a suit by such purchaser as plaintiff for a declaration that he purchased the property on his own behalf and not benami for another is not barred under this section (h) On the same ground this section is no bar to a suit by the beneficial owner for possession against the judgment debtor pursuant to an agreement made between them after the sale of the property provided the certified purchaser is joined as a party to the suit and he does not claim the property (i) In fact the present section applies only when a suit is instituted by a person claiming to be the real purchaser as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant on the allegation that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims This point is now made clear by the substitution of the word plaintiff for the words any other person in sub section (1)

Suit by a third person for a declaration that the certified purchaser is merely a benamidar—Under the corresponding s 317 of the Code of 1882 the High Court of Calcutta held that the only suits barred under that section were suits brought by the beneficial owner as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant and that suits brought by a third party as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant for a declaration that the property though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser is liable to satisfy a claim of such third party against the beneficial owner were not barred under that section (j) On the other hand the High Courts of Madras (k) and Allahabad (l) held that even suits brought by a third person as plaintiff were barred under that section The present section gives effect to the Calcutta decisions by providing in sub section (2) that nothing in this section shall interfere with the right of a third person to proceed against that (sic) property though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser on the ground that it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner

A obtains a decree against B and attaches certain property alleged to [illegible] to B. C objects to the attachment alleging that he is the certified purchaser of the property having purchased the same at a Court sale held in execution of a decree [illegible] against B by D. A alleges that the property was purchased by C benami for B [illegible] sues C for a declaration that C was merely the benamidar for B. Suit by beneficial owner in possession for declaration of title.—[illegible] is a conflict of opinion whether a suit by a beneficial owner in possession [illegible] declaration of his right to the property against the certified purchaser is barred [illegible] this section. The High Court of Calcutta in a case under s 317 of the Cod[illegible] held that such a suit was not barred under that section (m). On the other hand, the [illegible] Court of Allahabad held that such a suit was barred under that section (n). A [illegible] a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property bel[illegible] B is sold. B purchases the property in C's name. The certificate of sale is [illegible] but B continues in possession of the property. After a few years C gives [illegible] the tenants not to pay rent to B. B thereupon sues C for a declaration [illegible] real purchaser and for an injunction restraining C from interfering with his [illegible] The suit is not barred according to the Calcutta decision. It is barred [illegible] to the Allahabad decision. In the Calcutta case, the Court said: It is [illegible] which the plaintiff seeks to obtain a decree for possession against the ostensib[illegible] Resting as it does on an existing possession we do not think that it is a su[illegible] prohibited by s 317. As to this it was observed by Strachey C J in th[illegible] cited above: If the learned Judges in that case meant to lay down that s. 31[illegible] only where the plaintiff being out of possession seeks to recover posse[illegible] tified purchaser and can never apply to a suit by a plaintiff in possession [illegible] tion that the certified purchaser out of possession was not the real purch[illegible] agree with them. Banerji J said: The first paragraph [of the section] [illegible] to a suit for recovery of possession only. The correctness of the Cal[illegible] was doubted by the same Court in the undermentioned cases (o) but [illegible] that decision was followed by the same High Court in another case (p). It was [illegible] last mentioned case that where a Mahomedan father purchases propert[illegible] with his own money in the name of one of his sons and then lets the property [illegible] and the tenant pays rent to him this section is no bar to a suit by the o[illegible] the tenant and the son in whose name the property was bought fo[illegible] after his father's death.

Where the beneficial owner has been in possession for twel[illegible] a suit will lie at his instance against the benamidar for a declaration of [illegible] property. The basis of such a suit is the plaintiff's title by pos[illegible] based not on the ground that the defendant is a benamidar but on [illegible] possession. Such a suit does not come within the purview of this [illegible]

Joint purchase—The provisions of this section are designed to create some check on the practice of making what are called benami purchases at execution sales for the benefit of judgment debtors and in no way affect the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchase (s) It has accordingly been held that where one of several holders of a joint mortgage decree applies for execution of the decree under O 21 r 15 on behalf of all and the purchase money is set off against the entire amount of the debts the other decree holders are entitled to a declaration that the purchase was made on behalf of all the decree holders (t)

Where property is purchased at a Court sale by a member of a joint Hindu family in his name but with family funds the other members are entitled to sue him for a declaration that the purchase was made on behalf of the family though the certificate of sale is in his name The section does not apply to such a case This was decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bodh Singh v Gunesh Chunder (u) a case under the Code of 1859 Their Lordships said [The provisions of the section] cannot be taken to affect the rights of members of a joint Hindu family who by the operation of law and not by virtue of any private agreement or undertaking [such as exists between a benamidar and the beneficial owner] are entitled to treat as part of their common property an acquisition however made by a member of the family in his sole name if made by the use of the family funds The same principle applies where the parties stand in the relation of partners and the purchase is made by one of the partners in his name with partnership funds (v)

When property is purchased at a Court sale by two or more persons jointly the executing Court has no power to grant the certificate of sale to one of them only without the consent of the others If it does so the case is one within sub sec (-) and the other purchasers are entitled to maintain a suit against the certified purchaser for their share of the property (w)

If A joint Hindu family consists of A and his sons and A purchases property at a Court sale with joint family funds without the concurrence of his sons in the name of a third person are the sons entitled to recover their share of the property from the third person [certified purchaser]? The High Court of Madras (x) has held that they are the reason given being that the purchase cannot in such a case be said to have been made by the father on behalf of the sons and the sons are not therefore beneficial owners and the section does not apply On the other hand the Allahabad High Court has held that if a managing member makes a purchase in the name of a third person the purchase though made without the consent of his sons must be deemed to have been made on behalf of the sons and the sons are precluded by this section from maintaining the suit (y) The Allahabad High Court purports to follow the Privy Council ruling in Suraj Narain v Iqbal Lal ( ) but that case as pointed out by the Madras High Court was a case under s 317 of the Code of 188 which contained the words on behalf of any other person now altered into on behalf of the plaintiff

Where beneficial owner is in possession with permission of certified purchaser—The High Court of Madras has held that if after obtaining a certificate of sale the purchaser acknowledges that his purchase is benami and gives up possession or does some act which clearly indicates an intention to waive his right or restore the property to the beneficial owner such act may by reason of the antecedent relation between the parties operate as a valid transfer of the property from the purchaser to the beneficial owner Thus if A is the manager of B's estate [and this is the antecedent relation between the parties] and the estate is sold in execution of a decree against B and is purchased by B in A's name a suit will lie at the instance of B against A for possession if after obtaining the certificate of sale A delivers possession of the property to B and then disturbs B in his possession The reason given is that the permission to hold possession amounts to a transfer of title from the benamidar to the beneficial owner and the suit is thus based not on the ground that the purchase was benami but on a fresh title created by the transfer (a) The High Court of Allahabad has dissented from this view and held relying on the Privy Council case of Lokee v Kallypuldo (b) that the mere permission to hold possession cannot give or transfer a title from the benamidar to the real owner and that a suit like the above would be barred under this section (c) The Calcutta High Court has followed the Allahabad decision (d) However that may be if the certified purchaser allows the beneficial owner to take possession the section does not enable him to sue the beneficial owner for possession, because possession has come into the hands of the person entitled to it (e)

Suit for specific performance against certified purchaser —In Venkatappa v Jalayya (f) a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that this section does not debar a plaintiff from maintaining a suit for specific performance against the certified purchaser if the plaintiff's claim is based upon an agreement to convey the property entered into after the purchase The decision in Venkatappa's case was approved by the Judicial Committee in Ramatbai v Peria (g) In Ramatbai's case it was held that the present section does not debar a plaintiff from maintaining a suit for specific performance against the certified purchaser if the plaintiff's claim is based upon an agreement made after the purchase to transfer the property to the plaintiff in pursuance of an agreement made before it The suit cannot in such a case be said to have been brought on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff within the meaning of this section

Certified purchaser —Where a purchaser who had not obtained a certificate was sued and afterwards applied for and obtained a certificate it was held that he was a certified purchaser within the meaning of this section (h)

Successor in title of certified purchaser —This section bars a suit not only against a certified purchaser but also against persons claiming title from him (i) Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether s 317 of that Code was a bar to suits against persons claiming title from the certified purchaser On the one hand the High Courts of Madras Allahabad and Calcutta held that the expression certified purchaser in s 317 of that Code did not include a person claiming through or under the certified purchaser such as an heir or an assignee (j) and that that section therefore was no bar to a suit against such person On the other hand the Bombay High Court held that the expression certified purchaser included his successor in title (k) The present section contains a legislative recognition of the view taken by the High Court of

67 [S 327] (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, make rules for any local area imposing conditions in respect of the sale of any class of interests in land in execution of decrees for the payment of money, where such interests are so uncertain or undetermined as, in the opinion of the Local Government, to make it impossible to fix their value

Power for Local Government to make rules as to sales of land in execution of decrees for payment of money

(2) When on the date on which this Code came into operation in any local area, any special rules as to sale of land in execution of decrees were in force therein, the Local Government may by notification in the local official Gazette, declare such rules to be in force, or may, by a like notification, modify the same

Every notification issued in the exercise of the powers conferred by this sub section shall set out the rules so continued or modified

Sub sec (2) was inserted in the section by the Code of Civil Procedure Amendment Act I of 1914 As to the result where no notification is issued as provided by sub sec (2) see the undermentioned cases (n)

DELEGATION TO COLLECTOR OF POWER TO EXECUTE DECREES AGAINST IMMOVABLE PROPERTY

68 [S 320 1st para] The Local Government may declare, by notification in the local official Gazette, that in any local area the execution of decrees in cases in which a Court has ordered any immovable property to be sold, or the execution of any particular kind of such decrees, or the execution of decrees ordering the sale of any particular kind of, or interest in, immovable property, shall be transferred to the Collector

Object of the section — The object of these provisions [i e provisions relating to the execution of decrees by Collectors] is well known In different parts of India the effect of sales in execution of decrees was to transfer landed estates from the old families to modern speculators A strong opinion was entertained by certain members of the Government of India that these results of the administration of civil justice were impolitic and inexpedient and it was suggested that some procedure might be devised by which the Chief Executive Officer of the district would be enabled to liquidate the debts of encumbered land holders without the immediate sale of their estates and so to preserve the old landed gentry of the country The provisions of ss 320 to 325C [now ss 68 70 71 and 72 and schedule III] were inserted in the Code of Civil Procedure in order to give effect to these suggestions (o) See notes to O 21 r 90 Waiver and estoppel

Provisions of Third Schedule to apply

69 [New] The provisions set forth in the Third Schedule shall apply to all cases in which the execution of a decree has been transferred under the last preceding section

Rules of procedure

70 [S 320, 2nd 3rd and 4th paras] (1) The Local Government may make rules consistent with the aforesaid provisions—

(a) for the transmission of the decree from the Court to the Collector, and for regulating the procedure of the Collector and his subordinates in executing the same, and for retransmitting the decree from the Collector to the Court,

(b) conferring upon the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector all or any of the powers which the Court might exercise in the execution of the decree if the execution thereof had not been transferred to the Collector,

(c) providing for orders made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector, or orders made on appeal with respect to such orders, being subject to appeal to, and revision by, superior revenue authorities as nearly as may be as the orders made by the Court, or orders made on appeal with respect to such orders, would be subject to appeal to, and revision by appellate or revisional Courts under this Code or other law for the time being in force if the decree had not been transferred to the Collector

(o) [illegible]

Jurisdiction of Civil Courts barred

(2) A power conferred by rules made under sub section (1) upon the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector, or upon any appellate or revisional authority, shall not be exercisable by the Court or by any Court in exercise of any appellate or revisional jurisdiction which it has with respect to decrees or orders of the Court

Power of Local Government to make rules — A Local Government has power under this section to make a rule providing that no suit shall lie to set aside a sale held or confirmed by a Revenue Authority Such a rule is not ultra vires (p)

Civil Courts are precluded from interfering in any matter declared by notification to be within the Collector s jurisdiction —Thus if it is declared by notification that a decree for the sale of a particular kind of property e g ancestral property should be transferred to the Collector for execution a sale of the property if made by a Civil Court is void Such a notification ousts the jurisdiction of the Court so far as regards the execution of the decree (q) For the same reason if the execution of a decree is transferred to the Collector the Court transferring the decree has no power to postpone the sale (r) or to give leave to the decree holder to bid under O 21 r 72 (s) or to re sell the property where a re sale is necessary (t) the Collector alone has that power Similarly where a decree is transferred for execution to the Collector and the decree is subsequently adjusted the application under O 21 r 2 [Code of 1882 s 258] for recording the adjustment should be made to the Collector (u) But where a decree has been sent to the Collector for execution under this section he holds the money which may be realized in execution of such decree at the disposal of the Court which sent the decree to him for execution and he is not competent to distribute such money in contravention of an order of the Court indicating the mode of distribution (v)

It is to be noted that sub section (2) does not take away the jurisdiction of and Court other than the Court referred to in it The Court there referred to is the Court mentioned in the previous portion of the section namely the Court to which an application was made for execution and which as such Court transmitted the decree for execution (v)

Where a suit would lie to set aside an order made by a Court executing a decree the fact that such order has been made by the Collector does not deprive the Civil Courts of the jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside such order (x)

Suit to set aside orders of Collector —A suit will lie to set aside an order made by the Collector if the order is ultra vires Thus no rule has been made by the Government of Bombay under this section empowering the Collector to set aside a sale under O 21 r 89 [Code of 1882 s 310A] on a deposit by the judgment debtor of the amount specified in that rule nor is there any rule empowering him to set aside a sale under O 21 r 90 [Code of 1882 s 311] on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale (y) Nor has any rule been made by the Local Government of the N W P under this section empowering the Collector to set aside a sale under O 21 r 89 [Code of 1882 s 310A] ( ) though there is a rule empowering him to set aside a sale under O 21 r 90 [Code of 1882 s 311] Again no rule made by any of the Local Governments empowers the Collector to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud (a) The Collector has no jurisdiction to set aside a sale after it has been confirmed and the decree retransmitted to the Civil Court (b) If in any of these cases the Collector arrogates to himself the power which he has not and sets aside the sale the order is ultra vires and it is competent to the auction purchaser to bring a regular suit in a Civil Court for a declaration that the sale was valid and that the order of the Collector setting aside the sale was invalid (c)

Suit to set aside sale held by Collector—A suit will lie to set aside a sale held by the Collector if the sale was brought about by the fraud of the decree holder the auction purchaser and persons who had brought pre emption suits and who had all conspired to deprive the plaintiff of the property for O 21 r 90 applies only to fraud in publishing and conducting a sale (d)

Appeal—No appeal lies to the High Court from an order passed by the Collector in an execution proceeding transferred to him under this section The reason is that this section specially provides that an appeal shall lie from the order of the Collector to such authorities as the Local Government may by rules prescribe (e)

Revision—An order made by the Collector in the course of execution proceedings under this section sanctioning the prosecution of a party to the suit under s 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is an order made by him as a Revenue Court and is not therefore subject to revision by the High Court (f)

71 [S 320, 5th para] In executing a decree transferred to the Collector under section 68 the Collector and his subordinates shall be deemed to be acting judicially

Collector deemed to be acting judicially

Shall be deemed to be acting judicially—The effect of this provision is that the Collector and his subordinates are entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the Judicial Officers Protection Act XVIII of 1850 which are as follows —

No Judge Magistrate Justice of the Peace Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court for any act done or ordered to be done by him in the discharge of his judicial duty whether or not within the limits of his jurisdiction provided that he at the time in good faith believed himself to have jurisdiction to do or order the act complained of and no officer of any Court or other person bound to execute the lawful warrants or orders of any such Judge Magistrate Justice of the Peace Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court for the execution of any warrant or order which he would be bound to execute if within the jurisdiction of the person issuing the same

72 [S 326] (1) Where in any local area in which no declaration under section 68 is in force the property attached consists of land or of a share in land, and the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land or share is objectionable and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation of the land or share the Court may authorize the Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him instead of proceeding to a sale of the land or share

Where Court may authorize Collector to stay public sale of land

(2) In every such case the provisions of sections 69 to 71 and of any rules made in pursuance thereof shall apply so far as they are applicable

The Court may authorize the Collector —These words are not imperative but leave a discretion to the Civil Court That discretion can only be exercised upon materials placed before the Court It is therefore open to the decree holder to place those materials in the shape of evidence before the Civil Court and to satisfy the Court as well by evidence as by argument that the proposal of the Collector is not feasible or practicable The Court should not decline to receive the evidence offered by the decree holder (g)

Temporary alienation —This section admits only of a temporary alienation of land and not an arrangement by which possession is to be left with the judgment debtor subject to payment of the judgment debt by instalments (h)

A temporary alienation of land belonging to a judgment debtor who is a member of an agricultural tribe does not come within the purview of s 16 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act 13 of 1900 which prohibits a sale out and out (i)

Provisions of sections 69 to 71 to apply —Reading this section with para 2 of schedule III [Code of 1882 s 322] referred to in s 69 it is clear that the provisions of this section cannot be applied to a decree which directs the sale of land in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same (j) Similarly reading this section with para 11 sub para (1) of schedule III [Code of 1882 s 322A] it follows that where a judgment debtor executes a mortgage of his property while the property is in the management of a Collector under this section with an undertaking to put the mortgagee in possession the mortgagee is not entitled to claim possession (k) Likewise reading this section with the same paragraph no Court can issue any process of execution against any immovable property in the management of a Collector under this section Therefore the period during which the property is in the management of the Collector under this section should be excluded from the period of limitation applicable to the decree of which execution is refused by the Court by reason of the property having been in the Collector s management (l) see sch III para 11 sub para (3)

Distribution of Assets

73 [S 295] (1) Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons

Proceeds of execution sale to be rateably distributed among decree holders

Provided as follows —

(a) where any property is sold subject to a mortgage or charge the mortgagee or incumbrancer shall not be entitled to share in any surplus arising from such sale

(b) where any property liable to be sold in execution of a decree is subject to mortgage or charge, the Court may, with the consent of the mortgagee or incumbrancer, order that the property be sold free from the mortgage or charge, giving to the mortgagee or incumbrancer the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold,

(c) where any immovable property is sold in execution of a decree ordering its sale for the discharge of an incumbrance thereon, the proceeds of sale shall be applied—first, in defraying the expenses of the sale, secondly, in discharging the amount due under the decree thirdly, in discharging the interest and principal moneys due on subsequent incumbrances (if any) and fourthly, rateably among the holders of decrees for the payment of money against the judgment debtor, who have, prior to the sale of the property applied to the Court which passed the decree ordering such sale for execution of such decrees, and have not obtained satisfaction thereof

(2) Where all or any of the assets liable to be rateably distributed under this section are paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets

(3) Nothing in this section affects any right of the Government

Changes introduced by the section—The present section differs from the corresponding s 295 C P C 1882 in the following respects —

1 The words where assets are held by a Court have been substituted for the words whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree This it is submitted introduces an important alteration though the High Court of Bombay has held otherwise See notes Assets held by a Court on p 233 below

2 The words before the receipts of such assets have been substituted for the words prior to the realization See notes Before the receipt of the assets on p 231 below

3 The word passed has been added after the word money See notes Same judgment debtor on p 240 below

4 The words interest in in cl (b) have been substituted for the words right against to bring the wording of that clause into line with the Transfer of Property Act 1882 s 96 This is a mere verbal alteration

Rateable distribution—The object of this section is to provide a cheap and expeditious remedy for the execution of money decrees held against the same judgment debtor by adjusting the claims of rival decree holders without the necessity for separate proceedings (m) Under the Code of 1859 (s 2 0) the creditor who first attached property has a prior claim to have his decree satisfied out of the sale proceeds to the exclusion of other creditors but now all judgment creditors who apply to the Court prior to the receipt of the sale proceeds by the Court are entitled to share rateably (n) In Bithal Das v Nand Kishore (o) Strachey C J said The object of the section is two fold The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings to obviate in a case where there are many decree holder each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree holders in the position I have described upon the same footing and making the property rateably divisible among them instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be first who had attached and sold the property A obtains a decree against B in Court X for Rs 4 000 and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B and the property is thereupon attached C then obtains a decree also against B in Court Y for Rs 2 000 and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of the same property attached in execution of A s decree The property is then sold by the Court in execution of A s decree for Rs 3 000 C is entitled to share rateably in the net sale proceeds that is to say if the net sale proceeds amount to Rs 3 000 A will be paid Rs 2 000 and C will be paid Rs 1 000 It is not necessary to entitle C to participate in the assets that he should have given notice to A of the application made by him for execution of his decree (p)

Conditions for rateable distribution —To entitle a decree holder to participate in the assets of a judgment debtor the following conditions must be present —

1 The decree holder claiming to share in the rateable distribution should have applied for execution of his decree to the Court by which the assets are held
2 Such application should have been made prior to the receipt of the assets by the Court
3 The assets of which a rateable distribution is claimed must be assets held by the Court
4 The attaching creditor as well as the decree holder claiming to participate in the assets should be holders of decrees for the payment of money
5 Such decrees should have been obtained against the same judgment debtor

No rateable distribution can be claimed under the section unless all the conditions enumerated above are fulfilled We proceed to examine those conditions

Court to which application for execution should be made —Those decree holders alone are entitled to rateable distribution who have applied for execution of their decrees in the form prescribed by O 21 r 11 [Cod of 1882 s 235] to the Court by which the assets are held (q) An application to the Court which passed the decree to issue a precept of attachment to the Court by which the assets are held is not sufficient (r) Nor is an application to a Court in anticipation that the decree will be transferred to it for execution (s)

The point to be considered under this head is whether where property of the same judgment debtor is attached in execution of decrees of more Courts than one and the property is sold by the Court of the highest grade the holders of decrees of inferior Courts are bound in order that they may be entitled to rateable distribution to have their decrees transferred to the Court of the highest grade and make a fresh application for execution to that Court A obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the First Class In execution of the decree *B*s property is attached by that Court C then obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of the same property The property is then sold by the First Class Subordinate Judge in execution of *A*s decree and the sale proceeds are received by that Court Here the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class is the Court by which the assets are held Is C entitled to rateable distribution? No according to the High Court of Bombay he not having applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class for execution of the decree that being the Court by which the assets are held (t) Yes according to the Calcutta (u) Rangoon (v) and Madras High Courts (w) the reason given being that under s 63 the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class is the Court to determine all claims relating to the attached property and such claims include claims for rateable distribution

2 Before the receipt of the assets —The application for execution must be made before the receipt of the assets by the Court The corresponding s 295 of the Code of 1882 commenced as follows —

Whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree and more persons than one have prior to the realization applied to the Court by which such assets are held

The present section begins as follows —

"Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have before the receipt of such assets made application to the Court"

The word "realization" was rather obscure Indeed it called for several decisions in which the Courts had to define its precise meaning The word "receipt" which is now substituted for "realization" is not likely to require any judicial interpretation Cases of the character noted below which turned upon the word "realization" are not likely to arise under the present section so clear is the meaning of the word "receipt"

A B and C held each a money decree against the same judgment debtor In December 1892 A attached by a prohibitory order funds of the judgment debtor in the hands of D [O 21 r 46 Code of 1882 s 268] In January 1893 B attached the same funds in execution of his decree In February 1893 D paid the funds into Court On the same day but after payment was made into Court C applied to attach the funds as property in the custody of the Court [O 21 r 52 Code of 1882 s 272] It was held under s 295 of the Code of 1882 that the funds should be rateably distributed between A and B and that C was not entitled to participate therein as his application was made subsequent to the realization of the assets by the Court (x) The decision would be the same under the present section for it is quite clear that C's application was made after the receipt of the assets by the Court

It was held under s 295 of the Code of 1882 that where property is sold in execution of a decree the sale proceeds are deemed to be realized not when the 25 per cent is deposited by the purchaser into Court under s 306 [now O 21 r 84] but when the balance of the purchase money is paid (y) Hence a decree holder who applied for execution before the entire amount due from the purchaser had been paid into Court was held entitled to share in the rateable distribution though the application was made after deposit of the 25 per cent But it was held that a decree holder who applied for execution after the entire amount of the purchase money had been paid into Court was not entitled to share in the rateable distribution though his application was made before the sale was confirmed by the Court under s 312 [now O 21 r 92] and the decision was put on the ground that the point of time when assets are realized is when the sale proceeds are paid into Court and not when the sale becomes absolute (z) The result is the same under the present section as will be seen by substituting the word "received" for the word "realized" (a)

The High Court of Madras has held that where immovable property is sold in execution of a decree in separate parcels the sale proceeds are not deemed to be realized until the entire amount of the purchase money in respect of all the parcels is paid into Court (b) This decision was followed by the Calcutta High Court (c) but in a later case that Court held that where immovable property is sold in separate parcels the sale proceeds are deemed to be realized on the several dates on which they are received by the Court (d) As regards movables the Lahore Court has held that if the property consists exclusively of movables and they are sold in separate lots on different dates the sale proceeds are deemed to be realized on the several dates on which they are received by the Officer of the Court and not on the date on which the last payment is received Thus if some of the movables are sold and the price thereof is received on January 5 and the rest are sold and the price thereof is received on January 10 a decree holder who applies for rateable distribution on January 7 is entitled to rateable distribution of the sale proceeds realized on January 10 but not of those realized on January ɔ (e)

Where property is sold in execution by a person appointed by the Court under O 21 r 6 the receipt of purchase money by such person is for the purposes of this section equivalent to receipt of assets by the Court The material date therefore is not the date on which the Court receives the amount of the purchase money from such person but the date on which such person receives the purchase money from the purcha er (f)

When property which is attached in execution of decrees of several Courts is sold by a Court of inferior grade and the sale proceeds are transferred to the Court of highest grade for rateable distribution the date of receipt of assets is the date when the sale proceeds are received by the latter Court (g)

Sale by Collector —Where the sale is held by the Collector the application for execution must be made before the sale proceeds are received by him though he may send the sale proceeds to the Court under Sch III cl 9 at a later date (h)

3 Assets held by a Court —Far more important than the change effected by the word receipt is the change introduced by the omission of the words when ever as ets are realized by ale or otherwise in execution of a decree and the substitu tion therefor of the words where assets are held by a Court The latter words coupled with the word realization which occurs later on in the section include it is submitted several kinds of assets which were held not liable to rateable distribution under s 2ɔɔ of the Code of 1882

Assets available for rateable distribution —The only kinds of assets that were held to be available for rateable distribution under s 29ɔ were —

(a) as ets realized by sale in execution of a decree that is sale proceeds of property sold in execution of a decree (i) and

(b) assets realized otherwise in execution of a decree These words were held to mean assets realized from the property of the judgment debtor by such modes as tho e prescribed by s 291 [O 21 r 69] s 30ɔ [O 21 r 83] and s 322 [Sch III paras 2 and 7] (j) This was explained in later decisions as meaning assets realized in one of the modes expressly pre scribed by the sections of the Code (k) The following were held to be assets of this class —

(i) debts attached under s 268 [now O 21 r 46] and paid into Court by the garni hee (l)

(ii) rents of property under attachment realized by a receiver appointed under s 503 [now s ɔl cl (d)] at the instance of the decree holder (m) [The appointment of a receiver by the Court in such a ca e is a process of execution]

(iii) money in the custody of a pul lic officer attached under s 27_ [now O 21 r 5] and paid into Court by that officer (n)

(iv) money realized in execution of a decree held by the judgment debtor against another where such decree is attached and realized under O 21 r 53 [Code of 1882 s 273] (o)

(v) money paid under O 21 r 69 to the officer conducting the sale to stop the sale (p)

(vi) money raised by the judgment debtor by private alienation under O 21 r 83 and paid into Court (q)

(vii) the 25 per cent deposit paid by a defaulting execution purchaser which has not under O 21 r 86 been forfeited to Government (r)

Assets not available for rateable distribution—Assets not realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree were not liable to rateable distribution under s 295 The following are instances of assets held not to be realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree within the meaning of s 295 and therefore not subject to rateable distribution under that section —

Cases under s 295 of the Code of 1882

A —Purshotamdass v Surajbharthi (1882) 6 Bom 588—Moneys paid by a judgment debtor under arrest under s 236 of the old Code [now s 55 proviso 4] to the officer arresting him in order to secure his release were held to be assets not subject to rateable distribution Sir Charles Sargent C J said Section 295 must be read as if the words from the property of the judgment debtor were inserted after the word realized The provisions contained in sections 291 [O XXI r 83] 305 [O XXI r 69] and 322 [now Sch III paras 2 and " the latter para corresponding with s 323 of the old Code] are all modes of realizing assets from such property otherwise than by sale and are sufficient to account for the introduction of that expression into section 295 The effect of the above decision is that to constitute a realization with the meaning of s 295 it must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court or it must be a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code

The correctness of the reasoning in Purshotamdass case seems to have been doubted in Manilal v Nanabhai (s) where Sir Lawrence Jenkins C J said Prima facie the word realized implies that property has been converted into or obtained in cash or some other form available for immediate distribution and there is nothing in the word itself which requires that that process should take place as the result of any ulterior proceeding in the course of execution But it was the leading case under the old section and it was followed in cases B C D and E below

B —Gopal Dei v Chunni (1886) 8 All 67 following case A—Money paid into Court by the judgment debtor under s 2 5 of the old Code [now O XXI r 55 (a)] for payment of the amount due to the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached was held to be an asset not available for rateable distribution the reason given being that the money was not realized from the property of the judgment-debtor

C.—Sew Bux v Shib Chunder (1886) 13 Cal 225 following case A—A obtained a decree for money against B B's property was attached in execution of the decree C then obtained a decree for money against B and applied for attachment of B's said property a warrant of attachment was issued but the property was not actually attached B then filed his petition in insolvency and a vesting order was made The Official Assignee then paid into Court the amount of A's decree and the property was released from attachment C then applied for rateable distribution under s 295 of the amount paid into Court Held that C was not entitled to rateable distribution Trevelyan J said I do not think that in this case the money was realized out of the property of the judgment debtor I think that by sale or otherwise means by sale or other process of execution provided for in the Civil Procedure Code

D.—Prosonnomoyi v Sreenauth (1894) 21 Cal 809—In this case Sale J said that the rule deducible from cases A and C was that to constitute a realization within the meaning of section 295 it must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court or it must be a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code

E.—Vibudhapriya v Yusuf (1905) 28 Mad 380 following cases A B C and D—Moneys realized by a judgment debtor by a private sale of his property attached in execution of a decree against him and paid by him into Court under s 275 of the old Code [now O XXI r 55 (a)] for payment of the amount due to the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached were held to be assets not available for rateable distribution the reason given being that though there was a realization of assets the realization was not in one of the modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code

Note—The only distinction between cases B and F is that in case F the judgment debtor obtained the money by sale of the attached property while in case B he obtained it without any sale

It is submitted that the assets in cases A B C and F should under the present section be treated as assets available for rateable distribution The test under the present section is—

(1) whether the moneys of which rateable distribution is claimed are assets held by the Court and

(2) whether they have been realized or obtained in execution The scope of the new section is wider than that of the old one (t) See below notes under case F

Cases under the present section

In the following cases which were all decided under the present section it was held that the moneys held by the Court were not assets available for rateable distribution within the meaning of the section —

F.—Sorabji v Kala (1911) 36 Bom 156 12 I C 911—Money paid into Court by a judgment debtor under O XXI r 55 (a) [Code of 1882 s 275] for payment of the amount due to the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached has been held not subject to rateable distribution under this section (This is the same as case B above) Sir Basil Scott C J said In the

reference to the costs of realization we have an indication that the legislature contemplated that the assets referred to should be assets held in the process of execution If we were to hold that money paid into Court under Order XXI Rule 55 was assets held by the Court within the meaning of section 73 we should be only nullifying the provisions of Rule 55 for there will be no inducement to any judgment debtor to procure a payment into Court of the amount claimed by his attaching creditor if his money could at once be absorbed by rateable distribution amongst a number of other creditors This assumes that the word realized means realized by sale or other process of execution expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code as was held in cases A C D and E It is submitted with respect that the words sale or otherwise which occurred in s 295 of the Code of 1882 having been omitted in the present section the interpretation put upon those words in cases A C D and E can no longer govern cases arising under the present Code All that is necessary under the present Code is that (1) there should be assets held by the Court and (2) that such assets should have been realized or obtained in execution proceedings [see the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins cited in case A above] It cannot possibly be said that moneys paid into Court by a judgment debtor under stress of execution under O 21 r 55 (a) are not assets obtained in execution proceedings It is indeed difficult to see how this view of the section nullifies the provisions of O 21 r 55 for money paid into Court under r 55 may be held to be assets subject to rateable distribution and yet full effect may be given to r 55 There is no reason why because a particular payment may operate to release the person [see case G] or property of a judgment debtor from attachment that payment should be applied for the benefit exclusively of the decree holder at whose instance the person or property of the judgment debtor was attached Moreover the object of O 21 r 55 is not to afford any inducement to a judgment debtor as supposed by the Court in Sorabji v Kala All that O 21 r 55 says is that the circumstances mentioned in cls (a) (b) and (c) of that rule shall have the effect indicated in the rule As to the argument based on the costs of realization it cannot possibly be said that no costs were incurred in obtaining the moneys from the judgment debtor The decision in Sorabji v Kala has been disapproved by the High Court of Madras (u) It has also been disapproved by Pratt J in a later Bombay case—Nathmal v Maniram (v) As to the first of the two grounds on which the decision in Sorabji v Kala was based namely that the money was not realized in process of execution Pratt J said that it followed the cases decided on the words sale or otherwise which were held to mean sale or other process of execution expressly provided for in the Code but that it was too restrictive a construction under the amended section (w) As to the second ground namely that to allow rateable distribution of money paid into Court under O 21 r 55 would be to nullify the provision of r 55 the learned Judge said I also venture to doubt the correctness of the second reason Order XXI rule 55 operates effectively where there is one decree holder If there are a number of decree holders there is no scope for the rule for the judgment debtor has no motive for paying off one judgment-creditor when the same property is liable to be re attached

by the others To allow one decree holder to be paid off in full when the property is insufficient to discharge other judgment debts might possibly be undue preference and defeat the object of the section which is equal distribution of all the monies received in execution Again why should a judgment creditor whose attachment has been removed under Order XXI r 55 be in a better position than a judgment creditor who has taken the trouble of bringing the property to sale Lastly if the money paid under Order XXI rule 55 to remove an attachment is not available for rateable distribution then a fortiori money paid to stop a sale under Order XXI rule 69 would also not be so available But even under the old section it was as umed by Sir Charles Sargent in Purshottamdas case [case A p 234] that money paid to stop a sale is available for rateable distribution So that the interpretation put upon the section in Sorabji v Kala makes the new section more restrictive than the old one and this is not what the Legislature intended The decision in Sorabji v Kala has also been dissented from by the Calcutta High Court in Noor Mahomed v Bilasiram (x) In that case Rankin J said The money paid with whatever motive if paid to the Court is paid upon terms of the Code whatever they may be These terms as I read section 73 have been laid down so that distinctions in the form in which execution has been had in the precise extent to which execution has been allowed to run in the exact source or genesis of the fund in Court are now no part of the definition of assets that are subject to distribution rateably The object of the new Code in using larger language can only be to avoid anomaly To introduce a distinction on the strength of the voluntariness of the payment or the purpose of the debtor is I think to cut down the language and intention of the Code upon a principle which is inapplicable to the subject matter and which if applicable is very difficult to apply The same view has been taken in later decisions of the same Court (y) In a later Bombay case (z) Mirza J refused to follow the opinion of Scott C J in Sorabji v Kala on the ground that it was obiter

In the Madras case above referred to (a) it was held that moneys paid into Court under O 21 r 83 (2) were assets liable to be distributed rateably within the meaning of this section In the course of the judgment however the learned judges went to the length of observing that the assets referred to in the present section need not be assets obtained in execution proceedings This indeed is an extreme view and it was dissented from by Pratt J the learned judge holding that the reference to the costs of realization and the position of the section in the Code at the end of Part II on Execution led irresistibly to the conclusion that the assets to be available for rateable distribution must have been obtained in execution (b) The view taken by Pratt J is it is submitted correct In a recent Calcutta case Rankin J took much the same view as Pratt J (c) The learned Judge said If for example a defendant is made to pay into Court the amount of the plaintiff's claim as a condition of getting an adjournment it does not follow from my reading

G —Hoji Umersey v W & A Graham & Co (1917) 19 Bom L R 274 39 I C 693—Money paid by a judgment debtor under arrest under section 55 proviso 4 to the officer arresting him in order to secure his release is not an asset subject to rateable distribution [This case is the same as case A] Macleod J said It appears that the section was only intended to apply to assets realised by the sale of property attached This view of the section it is submitted is not correct If this view were correct money paid to stop a sale under O 21 r 69 and money raised by private alienation under O 21 r 83 would not be assets subject to rateable distribution But even under the old section it was assumed by Sir Charles Sargent in case A that such monies were available for rateable distribution It cannot possibly be said that the present section is more restricted in its scope than the old section See also the observations of Rankin J in Noor Mahomed's case cited in case F above

H —Nathmal v Maniram (1919) 21 Bom L R 975 53 I C 599—A obtained a decree for money against B and in execution of the decree took out a warrant for attachment of the movable property of B under O 21 r 43 The bailiff entered B's shop and showed the warrant to B and pointed out that if the money were not paid he would seize and keep in his custody the movable property in his shop B then paid the decretal amount and costs of execution and sheriff's poundage Upon these facts Pratt J expressed the opinion that the money having been paid under stress of the warrant (d) and the warrant being a process of execution the money was an asset available for rateable distribution within the meaning of the present section The learned Judge however felt bound by the decision of the Appellate Court in Soralji v Kala [case I] and held that the money was not subject to rateable distribution

I —Ghisulal v Tolarmull (1921) 26 C W N 169 70 I C 539—In a money suit by A against B B's property was attached before judgment and then released on C standing security for the amount of the claim The suit was ultimately decreed and A applied for execution whereupon C deposited the amount of the decree in Court On that very day just before the deposit was made D another decree holder applied for execution of his decree It was held that the moneys deposited by the surety were assets held by the Court within the meaning of this section and D was entitled to rateable distribution

Compensation under Land Acquisition Act 1894—Compensation deposited by the Collector in Court under s 31 of the Land Acquisition Act 1894 has been held to be assets held by the Court (e)

4 Decrees for the payment of money—It is only holders of decrees for the payment of money that are entitled to a rateable distribution under this section What is a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this section? We proceed to note the decisions —

(i) A decree for the payment of mesne profits is a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this section notwithstanding that the amount of mesne profits has not yet been ascertained The holder of such a decree who has applied for attachment under O 21 r 42 [Code of 1882 s 2] is entitled to a rateable distribution with other decree holders under this section (f)

(ii) A decree upon a mortgage which enables the mortgagee to realize the amount of the mortgage debt from the mortgaged properties and from the defendants personally was held to be a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of the old section by the High Court of Calcutta in Hart v Tara Prasanna Mukherji (g) In that case the Court said Every decree by virtue of which money is payable is to that extent a decree for money within the meaning of the section even though other relief may be granted by the decree [e g sale of mortgaged property] and the holder of such a decree is entitled to claim rateable distribution with holders of decrees for money simpliciter (h) Following these observations the High Court of Madras held that where a decree upon a mortgage directs the mortgagor to pay the mortgage debt to the mortgagee within the period fixed by the Court and provides that in default the mortgaged property should be sold and the balance if any should be recovered from the mortgagor the decree was one for the payment of money within the meaning of the old section (i) In subsequent cases however which turned upon the meaning of the expression decree for the payment of money which occurred in s 230 of the Code of 1882 [now s 48] the High Court of Calcutta dissented from the Madras decision on the ground that the decree in that case was not similar to the decree in Hart v Tara Prasanna Mukherji the decree in the latter case containing a distinct order upon the mortgagor personally to pay the amount of the mortgage debt (j) The decree in those cases was similar to the decree in the Madras case and it was held that the decree was not a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of s 230 of the Code of 1882 The decision it seems would have been the same if the Court had been called upon to interpret the same expression in s 295 of the Code of 1882 and the observations in Hart's case set out above would have been regarded as mere obiter dicta The Allahabad decisions bearing on the expression decree for the payment of money in s 230 of the Code of 1882 are also to the same effect (k) There is little doubt that if these High Courts were called upon to decide whether a decree of the character

in the Madras case was a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this section they would hold that it was not In any event the Madras decision cannot be sustained under this Code see O 21 r 20

(iii) A decree directing the payment under s 90 of the Transfer of Property Act [now O 34 r 6] of the balance of the mortgage debt remaining due after payment to the mortgagee of the nett proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property is a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this section (l)

(iv) A decree directing the payment of money by a person does not cease to be a decree for the payment of money so far as that person is concerned merely because it directs as against another person the realization of the money claim from mortgaged property Thus a decree against A B and C which so far as A and B are concerned is a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage by sale of their property but which does not direct the sale of any specific property belonging to C is as regards C a decree for the payment of money (m)

(v) A judgment entered up under s 86 of the Insolvent Debtors Act is a money decree (n)

5 Same judgment debtor —The provisions of this section do not apply unless the judgment debtor is the same Where the holder of a decree against two or more persons applies for a rateable distribution of the assets realized from property belonging to one of such persons the application is one for the execution of the decree against the same judgment debtor

C 644

Decree against legal representative of judgment debtor—The High Courts of Bombay and Madras have held that if a decree is obtained by X against B and by Y after *B*s death against *B*s legal repre entative the judgment debtor is not the same and the pre ent section does not apply (o) A different opinion has been expressed by the High Court of Calcutta (p)

Clauses (a) (b) and (c)—The first paragraph of this section and clauses (a) and (b) have reference to sales in execution of simple money decrees Clause (a) declares the incompetence of a mortgagee or incumbrancer as such to share in any surplus proceeds when property is old subject to his mortgage or charge But the alternative is afforded to him by clau e (b) of consenting to the property being sold free of his mortgage or charge in which case the Court may give him the same right against the sale proceeds as he had against the property Clause (c) has reference to a sale in execution enforcing an incumbrance but in di tributing the sale proceeds the discharge of subsequent (and not prior) in umbrances is alone taken into account (q) but no payment can be made to a subsequent incumbrancer if the mortgagor challenges its exi tence or validity (r) In cases coming under clause (c) the application for execution must be made prior to the sale of the property (s) Compare O 34 r 13

Claims for rateable distribution of assets—These claims are claims enforceable under an attachment within the meaning of s 64 See notes to s 64 Explanation to the section

Attachment before judgment—A decree holder who has caused property to be attached before judgment is not entitled to share in a rat able distribution of the sale proceeds of that property unless he makes after judgment a fresh applica tion for execution under O 21 r 11 [Code of 1882 s 235] O 38 r 11 [Code of 1882 s 490] does not touch the point (t)

Sub sec (2) Suit for refund—The scheme of this section is to enable the Court as a matter of administration to distribute the assets according to what seem at the time to be the rights of parties without this distribution importing a conclusive adju dication as to tho e rights which may be subsequently re adjusted in a suit brought under the penultimate paragraph of the section (u) Such a suit is virtually a suit for money had and received and the period of limitation is three years from the date of the receipt of the a sets by the defendant (v) The suit being one for money had and received it would be premature if it were brought before the moneys were actually paid to the defendant A mere order for the payment of money under the section is not sufficient to found the action (w)

Suit by sub equent mortgagee to recover balance of money reali ed by sale under a prior mortgage—X mortgages his property to A He then mortgages the same property to B Subsequently he executes a further charge on the property in favour of A A sues X on the first mortgage joining B as a defendant and obtains a decree on the mortgage The property is sold in execution of the decree and a balance of Rs 12 000 which remains after satisfying A s decree is deposited in Court A then obtains a decree for sale on the further charge and in execution of the decree draws out the balance deposited in Court B is not joined as a party to this suit nor is any notice given to him that A was drawing out of Court the balance of Rs 12 000 B then sues A to recover the amount drawn out by A that is Rs 12 000 Such a suit is not one under sub sec (2) and the period of limitation applicable to the suit is 12 years under art 132 of the Limitation Act The suit is really one to enforce payment of money charged upon immovable property within the meaning of that article (x)

Declaratory suit—Is a decree holder claiming under this section entitled to file a suit for a declaration that another decree holder is not entitled to rateable distribution and for an injunction restraining him from receiving payment before distribution of the assets by the Court or is he bound to wait until actual distribution is made and then sue for a refund? In a Madras case (y) Sadasiva Ayyar J expressed the opinion that he is entitled to sue for a declaration

Inquiry as to the validity of decree—There is a conflict of opinion whether on a claimant s objection that a decree obtained by another claimant is collusive that is obtained by the latter in collusion with the judgment debtor the Court has power to inquire into the validity of the decree The High Court of Calcutta (z) has held that it has On the other hand the High Courts of Madras (a) and Bombay (b) have held that it has not The latter view it is submitted is correct If a Court executing a decree has no power to go behind the decree [see notes to s 38] much less has a Court acting under the provisions of this section (c)

Rights of Government not affected—A judgment debt due to the Crown is entitled to precedence in exe ution (d)

Attorneys lien—The section does not apply to a solicitor s common law lien for osts That lien is not affected by the attachment of the decree (e)

Rights created by this section not affected by insolvency—An order made under this section for rateable distribution is not affected by the insolvency of the judgment debtor subsequent to the making of the order But the order will be confined in it operation to the assets of the judgment-debtor realized up to the date of the order of adjudication assets realized after the date of the order of adjudication will vest in the Official Assignee (f)

Appeal—An order made under this section is not appealable unless all the conditions enumerated in s 47 are present (g) One of those conditions is that the question decided by the Court should be one which arose between the parties to the suit that is between the judgment debtor on the one hand and the decree holder on the

RESISTANCE TO EXECUTION

74 [S 330] Where the Court is satisfied that the holder of a decree for the possession of immovable property or that the purchaser of immovable property sold in execution of a decree has been resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession of the property by the judgment debtor or some person on his behalf and that such resistance or obstruction was without any just cause, the Court may, at the instance of the decree holder or purchaser, order the judgment debtor or such other person to be detained in the civil prison for a term which may extend to thirty days and may further direct that the decree holder or purchaser be put into possession of the property

As to procedure in suits by or against Government see O 27

Scope of the section—This section does not enlarge or in any way affect the extent of the claims or liabilities enforceable by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council which must always depend on the provisions of the Government of India Act 1858 s 65 [now Government of India Act 1915 s 32] It gives no cause of action but only declares the mode of procedure when a cause of action has arisen (a) That section enacts that the Secretary of State in Council shall and may sue and be sued as well in India as in England by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate and all persons and bodies politic shall and may have and take the same suits remedies and proceedings legal and equitable against the Secretary of State in Council of India as they could have done against the said Company that is the East India Company (b)

Jurisdiction —A suit against the Secretary of State for India can only be brought in the Court within the local limits of whose juri diction the cause of action arose The words dwell or reside or carry on bu iness or personally work for gain which occur in ss 16 19 and 20 of the Code and cl 12 of the Letters Patent do not apply to the Secretary of State in Council (e)

Information exhibited by Advocate General —The power of the Advocate General to exhibit information in the nature of actions at law or bill in equity was expressly declared by s 111 of the East India Company Act 1813 [53 Geo 3 c 155] and kept alive by s 2 of the Government of India Act 1833 [3 & 4 Will 4 c 85] and again by s 1 of the Government of India Act 1853 [16 & 17 Vict c 95] and by s 29 of the Government of India Act 1858 [21 & 22 Vict c 106] now merged in s 114 of the Government of India Act 1915 [5 and 6 Geo 5 c 61] As the Governor General in Council was pre luded by s 22 of the Indian Councils Act 1861 [24 & 25 Vict c 67] from legislative interference with the provisions of any of the enactments above quoted it was thought that s 416 of the Code of 1882 [now sub section (1) of the present section] in so far as it excluded information exhibited by the Advocate General did not compre hend a full and accurate statement of the law on the subject Accordingly sub section (2) was added to show that the power exists and is not affected by the section

Appeals —The rule laid down in this section applies also to appeals (f)

80 [S 424] No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been, in the case of the Secretary of State in Council delivered to, or left at the office of a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the district, and, in the case of a public officer, delivered to him or left at his office, stating the cause of action the name description and place of residence of the plaintiff and the relief which he claims and the plaint shall contain a state ment that such notice has been so delivered or left

Notice

Changes in the section —This section corresponds with s 424 of the Code of 1882 The words any act have been substituted for the words an act and the words by such public officer for the words by him See notes below Notice to Secretary of State

Provisions of this section imperative —The section is a matter of civil procedure and cannot be said to be subject to section 65 of the Government of India Act see note Scope of section under section 79 The section is explicit and mandatory and admits of no implications or exceptions (g) The language of this section is imperative and ab olutely debars a Court from entertaining a suit instituted without compliance with its provisions If the provisions of the section are not complied with the plaint must be rejected under O 7 r 11 (d) (h)

Object of notice—The object of the notice required by this section is to give the Secretary of State or the public officer an opportunity to reconsider his legal position and to make amends or settle the claim if so advised without litigation (i)

Notice must be given after accrual of cause of action—A notice given before the cause of action has arisen is invalid (j)

Devolution of defendant's interest upon Government pending suit—No notice is necessary if the defendant's interest devolves upon Government during the suit e g a private railway company is taken over by Government for then the suit has already been instituted (k) But if the suit was instituted in a Court which has no jurisdiction to try a suit against Government and the devolution occurs after the plaint has been returned for presentation in the proper Court notice is necessary (l)

Sufficiency of notice—A notice under this section is sufficient if it substantially fulfils its object in informing the parties concerned generally of the nature of the suit intended to be filed (m) Hence a notice is not invalid merely because it is given by only two out of three plaintiffs (n) It is essential however that the notice should state the names descriptions and places of residence of all the plaintiffs Hence where a suit was brought by sixty three plaintiffs but the notice contained the names descriptions and places of residence of only two of them it was held that the notice was insufficient (o)

Waiver of notice—It is competent to the Secretary of State to waive notice and he may be estopped by his conduct from pleading the want of notice at a late stage of the trial Thus where the Secretary of State took objection to the sufficiency of notice in his written statement but raised no issue on the point when issues were settled and took no objection during the trial the Court held that another defendant was not competent to raise the issue at a later stage as the Secretary of State had waived notice (p)

Notice to Secretary of State—Where a suit is to be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council notice to him under this section must be given in all cases whether the act in respect of which the suit is to be brought purports to be done by him in his official capacity or not The words in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity refer to the public officer and not to the Secretary of State The substitution of the words by such public officer for the words by him which occurred in the corresponding s 424 of the Code of 1882 makes the point quite clear

Notice to public officer—Act purporting to be done in official capacity—The present section corresponds with s 424 of the Code of 1882 except that the word any has been substituted for the word an and the words such public officer have been substituted for the word him According to the Concise Oxford Dictionary to purport in this context means to be intended to seem Applying this meaning the words any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity mean any act intended to seem to be done by him in his official capacity (q) If the act was one such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting the act clearly purports to be done in his official capacity within the ordinary meaning of the term purport (r)

Notice to the Secretary of State must be given in all cases whatever the character of the suit may be (s) but notice to a public officer is to be given in those cases only where the suit is in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity It follows that notice to a public officer is not necessary where the act done by him is not within his sphere of duties Thus where a public officer took possession of property which he had no authority to seize and was sued for trespass it was held that the suit was not against him in his official capacity but as a private individual and therefore no notice was necessary (t) So also when an investigating police officer assaulted a witness (u) or a sub overseer was assaulted by his superior officer and the suit was for damages the act complained of was not an act purporting to be done by the defendant in his official capacity and therefore no notice was necessary (v) No notice is necessary when the suit is not in respect of an act done by the public officer although he is made a defendant as when a Collector is made a party defendant for the protection of the title of a minor (w) or when the suit is against the Official Trustee for the determination of the rights of beneficiaries to trust funds in his hands (x) or when the Official Assignee as representing the estate of an insolvent is made a party in a suit for declaration of title and no act of the Official Assignee is complained of except an objection to the entry of plaintiff's name on the record of rights (y)

The decisions are conflicting as to whether notice is necessary under this section when a public officer acts mala fide that is maliciously or dishonestly it being held in some cases that it is not (z) while in others that it is (a) necessary The former proceed on the ground that an act done mala fide by a public officer cannot be said to be an act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity The latter proceed on the ground that the section makes no distinction between acts done bona fide and acts done mala fide and that notice is necessary in every case where a public officer purports to act in his official capacity Thus a suit against a police officer for having searched the house of the plaintiff dragged him to the thana and detained and kept him in confinement for several hours maliciously and without cause could be filed according to the former view without notice because the officer having acted illegally and in bad faith could not be said to have acted in his capacity as a public officer (b) Similarly in a suit against a District Magistrate and two officers of Police for conspiracy and malicious arrest and search it was held that the suit was one in which the public officer was sued in respect

Object of notice—The object of the notice required by this section is to give the Secretary of State or the public officer an opportunity to reconsider his legal position and to make amends or settle the claim if so advised without litigation (i)

Devolution of defendant's interest upon Government pending suit—No notice is necessary if the defendant's interests devolve upon Government during the suit e g a private railway company is taken over by Government for then the suit has already been instituted (k) But if the suit was instituted in a Court which has no jurisdiction to try a suit against Government and the devolution occurs after the plaint has been returned for presentation in the proper Court notice is necessary (l)

Sufficiency of notice—A notice under this section is sufficient if it substantially fulfils its object in informing the parties concerned generally of the nature of the suit intended to be filed (m) Hence a notice is not invalid merely because it is given by only two out of three plaintiffs (n) It is essential however that the notice should state the names descriptions and places of residence of all the plaintiffs Hence where a suit was brought by sixty three plaintiffs but the notice contained the names descriptions and places of residence of only two of them it was held that the notice was insufficient (o)

Waiver of notice It is competent to the Secretary of State to waive notice and he may be estopped by his conduct from pleading the want of notice at a late stage of the trial Thus where the Secretary of State took objection to the sufficiency of notice in his written statement but raised no issue on the point when issues were settled and took no objection during the trial the Court held that another defendant was not competent to raise the issue at a later stage as the Secretary of State had waived notice (p)

Notice to Secretary of State—Where a suit is to be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council notice thereof under this section must be given in all cases whether the act in respect of which the suit is to be brought purports to be done by him in his official capacity or not The word ... in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity refer to the public officer and not to the Secretary of State The substitution of the words by such public officer for the words by him which occurred in the corresponding s 424 of the Code of 1882 makes this point quite clear

Notice to public officer—Act purporting to be done in official capacity—The present section corresponds with s 424 of the Code of 1882 except that the word any has been substituted for the word an and the words such public officer has been substituted for the word him According to the Concise Oxford Dictionary the word purport in this context means to be intended to seem Applying this meaning the words any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity mean any act intended to seem to be done by him in his official capacity (q) If the act was one of an act done in bad faith and therefore no notice under this section was required (c) On the other hand in Jogendranath Roy v Price (d) where the plaintiff sued a District Magistrate for damages for illegal and malicious arrest under a warrant it was held that though the act was said to have been done maliciously notice was necessary under this section. The Court said The section does not seem to us to warrant the drawing of a distinction between acts of this kind done inadvertently or otherwise Following the above decision the High Court of Allahabad in a suit against a Police Officer to recover certain books seized by him in a search said that if he seized the books which was denied he did so in his capacity of Police Officer and that notice was necessary under this section (e) In a case decided by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (f) A sued B and attached before judgment certain wood belonging to B Thereafter the village munsif sold the wood for arrears of revenue due from B though there was no necessity to sell the whole and after retaining the amount due for arrears of revenue handed over the balance of the sale proceeds to B although he had knowledge of the attachment. Thereupon A brought a suit against the village munsif for damages alleging that the munsif had colluded with B and paid the balance to him The Court found that the munsif was aware of the attachment and that he dishonestly and fraudulently paid over the balance of the sale proceeds to B On the question of notice under this section the Full Bench held that the munsif was entitled to notice under this section although he acted mala fide in the discharge of his duties The latest decisions of all the High Courts are in favour of the view that notice is necessary even if the act is done mala fide In this connection it is well to recall the dictum of Privy Council in Bhagchand v Secretary of State (g) that the section admits of no implications or exceptions

Suits on contracts and torts —The High Court of Bombay had held in a series of cases that the requirement of notice was limited to suits on tort and that no notice was necessary in suits founded on contract (h) This distinction for which there is no justification in the terms of the section has been swept away by the Privy Council judgment in Bhagchand v Secretary of State (i) which describes the section as imposing a statutory and unqualified obligation upon the Court and as applicable to all forms of action and all kinds of relief

Declaratory suits —The section applies to suits for a declaration (j)

Suits for injunction —There was a conflict of decisions as to whether the section applied to suits where the relief claimed was a perpetual injunction This is settled by the Privy Council judgment in Bhagchand v Secretary of State (k) approving Calcutta Madras and Allahabad decisions (l) that the section and the corresponding section 424 of the previous Codes should be strictly complied with and that they are applicable to all forms of action and all kinds of relief The Privy Council overruled Bombay decisions that no notice was necessary in a suit for an injunction against a public officer or even against the Secretary of State when the act to be restrained might occasion serious or irreparable damage (m) In delivering the judgment of the Board Viscount Sumner said To argue as the appellants did that the plaintiffs had a right urgently calling for a remedy while s 80 is a mere procedure is fallacious for s 80 imposes a statutory and unqualified obligation upon the Court So too the contention that the act purporting to be done by the Collector in his official capacity in respect of which the suit was begun was his threatened enforcement of payment is fallacious also since the illegality if any is in the order for recovery of the tax If that was valid there was nothing to be restrained Hence though the act to be restrained is something apprehended in the future the act alone in respect of which the suit lie if at all is the order already completed and issued In a Bombay case it was left open whether if with notice of a suit the intended defendant proceeded to act in such a way as to anticipate a hostile order of the Court in the intended suit the Court could restore the status quo ante on an interlocutory application before the trial (n)

By what name public officer to be sued—The suits referred to in this section are suits against the public officer personally in respect of acts done in his official capacity The public officer cannot be sued by his official name unless he is a corporation sole (o)

Death of complainant after notice but before suit—Notice is given by A under this section to the Secretary of State of a proposed suit A dies before the institution of the suit The notice by A does not enure for the benefit of his legal representative and he must give a fresh notice under this section before instituting the suit (p)

Amendment of plaint—Where notice of a proposed suit is once given it is not necessary to give a fresh notice of two months if the plaint has to be amended owing to discovery of facts not within the plaintiff s knowledge at the time of the institution of the suit (q) But no amendment will be allowed if the effect of the amendment is to convert the suit into another of a different character e g a suit based on negligence into one based on nuisance In such a case a fresh suit must be brought after giving fresh notice as required by this section (r)

Notice to Collector—A collector is entitled to notice under this section of a suit for damages in respect of an act done by him in his official capacity as agent of the Court of Wards but he is not entitled to such notice if he is sued or joined as a party not by reason of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity but merely for the protection of a minor s title (s)

Notice to Cantonment Committee—A Cantonment Committee constituted under the Indian Cantonments Act 1889 is a public officer within the meaning of this section (t)

Notice to Official Assignee—The Official Assignee is a public officer and he is entitled to notice under this section before a suit is filed against him in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity (u) The same rule applies to a Receiver appointed under the Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 (v) But no notice is necessary when the Official Assignee or Receiver is made a party to a suit to realize a charge on the property of the insolvent which has vested in him and no act or omission

Suits by Aliens and by or against Foreign and Native Rulers

83 [S 430] (1) Alien enemies residing in British India with the permission of the Governor General in Council, and alien friends, may sue in the Courts of British India, as if they were subjects of His Majesty

When aliens may sue

(2) No alien enemy residing in British India without such permission, or residing in a foreign country, shall sue in any of such Courts

Explanation —Every person residing in a foreign country the Government of which is at war with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and carrying on business in that country without a license in that behalf under the hand of one of His Majesty's Secretaries of State or of a Secretary to the Government of India shall, for the purpose of sub-section (2), be deemed to be an alien enemy residing in a foreign country

Alien enemy — As to who are alien enemies see the undermentioned cases (b)

Alien enemy residing in British India with permission of Government of India — A filed a petition in the Allahabad High Court for judicial separation against her husband The parties were Germans and the petition was filed while England was at war with Germany At the time of filing the petition A was residing in Lucknow apparently with the permission of the Government of India while her husband was in Germany After filing the petition A applied for an order directing the summons together with a copy of the petition to be sent to the Probate Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court in England for transmission to the Foreign Office for service upon the respondent The Court granted the application (c)

Limitation —Where the right of alien enemies to sue is suspended by an order of the Government the period during which the right is suspended is not to be excluded from the time prescribed by the Limitation Act for the suit (d)

When foreign States may sue

84 [S 431] (1) A foreign State may sue in any Court of British India

(2) Every Court shall take judicial notice of the fact that a foreign State has or has not been recognized by His Majesty or by the Governor General in Council

Sub section (1) proviso (2)—The second proviso to the corresponding s 431 C P C 1882 ran as follows —

Provided that the object of the suit is to enforce the private rights of the head or of the subjects of the foreign State

The language of that proviso was liable to be construed as conferring upon the head of a foreign State a general power to litigate in respect of the private rights of his subjects. Such however was not the object and the language has accordingly been modified to make it clear that the object of litigation by a foreign State must be the enforcement of a private right vested in the head of the State or in an officer of the State as such.

Private right vested in the head of a State—That is those private rights of a State that must be enforced through a Court of Justice as distinguished from its political rights (e)

Foreign State as plaintiff—A suit by a foreign State must be brought in the name by which it has been recognized by His Majesty (f)

85 [S 432] (1) Persons specially appointed by order of the Government at the request of any Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief, whether in subordinate alliance with the British Government or otherwise, and whether residing within or without British India or at the request of any person competent, in the opinion of the Government, to act on behalf of such Prince or Chief, to prosecute or defend any suit on his behalf shall be deemed to be the recognized agents by whom appearances, acts and applications under this Code may be made or done on behalf of such Prince or Chief

Persons specially appointed by Government to prosecute or defend on behalf of Princes or Chiefs

(2) An appointment under this section may be made for the purpose of a specified suit or of several specified suits, or for the purpose of all such suits as it may from time to time be necessary to prosecute or defend on behalf of the Prince or Chief

(3) A person appointed under this section may authorize or appoint persons to make appearances and applications and do acts in any such suit or suits as if he were himself a party thereto

Recognized agents specially appointed under this section—This section is an enabling section. It enables a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief to prosecute or defend suits through recognised agents specially appointed in that behalf it does not prevent the institution of a suit by a Sovereign Prince in his own name or through a recognized agent appointed under O 3 r 2 [Code of 1882 s 37] (g)

A plaint in a suit instituted on behalf of a Ruling Chief is signed by A B At the time of signing the plaint A B was not specially appointed to sue on behalf of the Chief under this section. The plaint is nevertheless good if A B is subsequently appointed to sue on behalf of the Chief and if the appointment is made before the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the suit (h)

A Political Agent not specially appointed under this section cannot sue on behalf of a Prince (i)

Discovery—A foreign State is not exempt from giving discovery (j)

Suits against Princes Chiefs ambassadors and envoys

(2) Such consent may be given with respect to a specified suit or to several specified suits, or with respect to all suits of any specified class or classes, and may specify, in the case of any suit or class of suits, the Court in which the Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy may be sued, but it shall not be given unless it appears to the Government that the Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy—

(a) has instituted a suit in the Court against the person desiring to sue him, or

(b) by himself or another trades within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(c) is in possession of immovable property situate within those limits and is to be sued with reference to such property or for money charged thereon

(3) No such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy shall be arrested under this Code, and, except with the consent of the Governor-General in Council certified as aforesaid, no decree shall be executed against the property of any such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy

(4) The Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, authorize a Local Government and any Secretary to that Government to exercise, with respect to any Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy named in the notification, the functions assigned by the foregoing sub sections to the Governor General in Council and a Secretary to the Government of India, respectively

(5) A person may, as a tenant of immovable property, sue, without such consent as is mentioned in this section, a Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy from whom he holds or claims to hold the property

Consent shall not be given unless it appears to the Government that — The words it appears to the Government that have been added in sub section (2) to make it clear that the decision of the Government is final and not open to question by the Court The contrary was assumed in the undermentioned cases (k)

Consent must be obtained before institution of suit —This section provides that a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief may be sued in any competent Court with the consent of the Governor General in Council. Such consent must be obtained before the institution of the suit consent given after the institution of the suit is not a sufficient consent under this section. If the consent is not obtained before the institution of the suit the proper course is to dismiss the suit or perhaps allow the plaintiff to withdraw it with liberty to bring a fresh suit under O 23 r 1 [Code of 1882 s 373] (l)

Waiver of objection to want of consent —As stated in the notes to s 21 where a Court has no jurisdiction at all to entertain a suit the objection to its jurisdiction may be taken at any stage of the suit even though the defendant may have at one time waived the objection for a defect in the jurisdiction cannot be cured by waiver but if the case is one of irregular exercise of jurisdiction the defect may be cured by waiver on the part of the defendant If a suit is entertained against a Sovereign Prince without the consent of the Governor General in Council the case is one of irregular exercise of jurisdiction and if the defendant does not object until the suit is ripe for hearing he will be deemed to have waived the objection to jurisdiction. This was decided by the High Court of Bombay after an exhaustive review of the authorities on the subject (m) This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Madras on the ground that the recognition of cases of waiver as excepted from the ordinary provisions of International law as under stood in England, cannot be imported into the clear language of the Indian Code (n) The Patna High Court has gone to the length of holding that applications for adjournment made on behalf of a Ruling Chief amount to a waiver of his privilege and disentitle him from objecting to the jurisdiction of the Court (o)

The fact that a Sovereign Prince chooses to waive his privilege in one suit does not preclude him from pleading it in another suit (p)

Suit against person who subsequently becomes a Ruling Chief—Where a person attains the rank of a Ruling Chief after the institution of a suit against him, the suit cannot be continued against him without the consent of the Governor General in Council (q)

Immovable property—Where a Ruling Chief and a private individual are co sharers in the profits of land within British India a suit by the latter against the Ruling Chief for his share of the profits under s. 165 of the Agra Tenancy Act [U P Act 2 of 1901] cannot be instituted in a Court of British India without the consent of the Governor General in Council (r)

Money charged on immovable property—Unless maintenance has been made a charge upon immovable property a mere claim for maintenance is not a claim for money charged on immovable property within the meaning of sub section (2) cl. (c) (s)

Suit against Ruling Chief in his private capacity—The provisions of this section apply whether the suit is brought against a Ruling Chief in his Sovereign capacity or in his private capacity e g as a trustee of a temple in British India (t)

Sovereign Prince—The Maharaja of Hill Tipperah is a Sovereign Prince within the meaning of this section in that the Tipperah State governs itself without dependence on any foreign power It makes and administers its own laws and the Maharaja admittedly exercises the power of life and limb within his own territory Its acknowledgment of the British Government as the paramount power and the nazar paid on the recognition by that Government of succeeding Maharajahs do not take away from it the status of a Sovereign State (u)

Ruling Chief—The Desai of Patadi is a Ruling Chief within the meaning of this section (v) The Kurundwad Jahageerdars are also Ruling Chiefs (w) The Maharaja of Benares is also a Ruling Chief (x)

Sub section (4)—For notifications issued under this sub section, see General Statutory Rules and Orders Vol I pp 625 638

Limitation—In computing the period of limitation the plaintiff is not entitled to deduct the time spent in obtaining a certificate under this section (y) Sec 13 of the Indian Limitation Act 1908 provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit the time during which the defendant has been absent from British India shall be excluded The Calcutta High Court has held that the time must be excluded even if the defendant was carrying on business in British India through an authorised agent during his absence (z) The High Court of Bombay however has held that ec 13 of the Limitation Act mu t be read with secs 85 86 and 87 of the Code so far as a Sovereign Prince or a Ruling Chief is concerned and that such a Prince or Chief can be held to reside in British India within the meaning of sec 13 of the Limitation Act in so far as he actually carries on business through his representatives in British India (a)

Style of Princes and Chiefs as parties to suit

Provided that in giving the consent referred to in the foregoing section the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government, as the case may be, may direct that any such Prince or Chief shall be sued in the name of an agent or in any other name

INTERPLEADER

88 [S 470, R S C, O 57, rr 1 2] Where two or more persons claim, adversely to one another the same debt, sum of money or other property, movable or immovable, from another person, who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs and who is ready to pay or deliver it to the rightful claimant, such other person may institute a suit of interpleader against all the claimants for the purpose of obtaining a decision as to the person to whom the payment or delivery shall be made and of obtaining indemnity for himself

Where interpleader suit may be instituted

Provided that where any suit is pending in which the rights of all parties can properly be decided, no such suit of interpleader shall be instituted

See O 35 below

Changes in the section —This section corresponds with s 470 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

(1) The words, the same debt sum of money or other property movable or immovable have been substituted for the words, the same payment or property

(2) The words who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs have been borrowed from R.S C O 57 r 2 and have been substituted for the words whose only interest therein is that of a mere stakeholder

What is an interpleader suit.—An interpleader suit is one in which the real dispute is between the defendants only and the defendants interplead that is to say plead against each other instead of pleading against the plaintiff as in an ordinary suit. In every interpleader suit there must be some debt or sum of money or other property in dispute between the defendants only and the plaintiff must be a person who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs and who is ready to pay or deliver it to such of the defendants as may be declared by the Court to be entitled to it. Thus suppose certain property is claimed by A as well as by B and X is in possession of that property and claims no interest in the property himself and is ready and willing to deliver it to such party as may be declared by the Court to be the rightful owner of it. X as plaintiff may institute an interpleader suit against A and B as defendants. In such a case X will as a rule be dismissed from the suit at the first hearing after his costs are provided for and A and B will be left to interplead and to fight the matter out between themselves as if one of them was plaintiff and the other was defendant (O 35 r 4) But before the plaintiff is dismissed from the suit he must deposit the property in dispute in Court (O 35 r 2)

Who claims no interest other than for charges or costs —These words indicate that the plaintiff in an interpleader suit must be in a real position of [illegible]. A railway company which claims no interest in goods in its possession other than a lien on the goods for wharfage demurrage and freight may institute an interpleader suit where the goods are claimed by two persons adversely to each other (b)

A holds in his hands a sum of Rs 5 000 which is claimed by B and C adversely to each other A institutes an interpleader suit against B and C It is found at the hearing that A had entered into an agreement with B before the institution of the suit that if B succeeded in the suit he should accept from A Rs 4 000 only in full satisfaction of his claim. Here A has by virtue of the agreement an interest in the subject-matter of the suit and he is not therefore entitled to institute an interpleader suit The suit must be dismissed (c)

A party who has taken an indemnity from one of the claimants is not entitled to [illegible] an interpleader suit (d)

A suit is not necessarily an interpleader suit and subject to the provisions of this section merely because one of the reliefs claimed by the plaintiff requires [illegible] to interplead together concerning certain claims The Court must look at [illegible] the prayers of the plaint to determine the exact nature of the suit (e)

PART V

Special Proceedings

Arbitration

89 [New] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the second Schedule

Arbitration

(2) The provisions of the second Schedule shall not affect any arbitration pending at the commencement of this Code, but shall apply to any arbitration after that date under any agreement or reference made before the commencement of this Code

Arbitration —The provisions of the Code of 1882 relating to arbitration have been transferred with certain modifications to a separate Schedule [Sch II] in the hope that at no distant date they may be transferred into a comprehensive Arbitration Act

Indian Arbitration Act 9 of 1899—Application of the Act.—The Act came into force on the first day of July 1899 It relates to arbitration by agreement without the intervention of a Court of Justice that is to say to private arbitrations only Sec. 3 of the Act provides that sections 523 to 526 of the Code of 1882 [now paras 17 19 and 20 of Sch. II] shall not apply to any submission or arbitration to which the Act applies. The question then arises to what cases does the Act apply? Sec 2 of the Act provides that the Act shall apply only in cases where if the subject matter submitted to arbitration were the subject of a suit the suit could whether with leave or otherwise be instituted in a Presidency town The terms of that section show that two conditions must be present before the provisions of the Arbitration Act can be applied to an agreement to refer matters in dispute to arbitration namely (1) that there should not be a suit pending in respect of those matters (f) and (2) that the case must be one in respect of which if either party wanted to bring a suit the suit could be instituted in a Presidency town. It is only to such cases that the Arbitration Act applies. In other cases the provisions of paras 17 19 and 20 of Sch. II apply

Sec 2 of the Arbitration Act empowers the Local Government with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, to declare the Act applicable to local areas other than Presidency towns as if they were Presidency towns

Any other law for the time being in force —See notes to O 23 r 3 Submission and award.

Suit on an award —As to the form of a suit on an award see Sch. I App A form No 10 See also notes to Sch. II para 20 This paragraph is no bar to a regular suit to enforce an award.

In this connection may be noted the provisions of s 30 of the Specific Relief Act of 1877 by which it is enacted that the provisions of Chapter II of the Act relating to the specific performance of contracts shall mutatis mutandis apply to awards See Pollock and Mulla s Indian Contract and Specific Relief Acts notes to s 30 of the latter Act

Special Case

90 [New] Where any persons agree in writing to state a case for the opinion of the Court, then the Court shall try and determine the same in the manner prescribed

Power to state case for opinion of Court.

See O 36 below

Re opening of case —It is settled practice that where a special case is stated by consent it can only be re opened by mutual consent (g)

Suits relating to Public Matters

91 [New] (1) In the case of a public nuisance the Advocate-General, or two or more persons having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General, may institute a suit, though no special damage has been caused, for a declaration and injunction or for such other relief as may be appropriate to the circumstances of the case

Public nuisances

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any right of suit which may exist independently of its provisions

This section is new It creates a right of action where there was none before

Remedies for a public nuisance —Nuisances are of two kinds—(1) public and (2) private

A public nuisance is an act or illegal omission which causes any common injury danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity or which must necessarily cause injury obstruction, danger or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right [Indian Penal Code s 268]

Where a person commits a public nuisance—

(a) he is liable to criminal prosecution under the Indian Penal Code

(b) he may be proceeded against under this section

(g) Mo ie v Scott (1919) 43 Bom 31 ?38 47 I C 64

(c) he is liable to damages in a suit at the instance of a private individual who suffers special damage by reason of the nuisance that is, damage beyond what is suffered by him in common with other persons affected by the nuisance (h).

These remedies it is conceived, are concurrent. The institution of a criminal prosecution does not bar a suit under this section (i) nor does the institution of a suit under this section bar a criminal prosecution, though cases may occur where the Advocate-General may in the exercise of his discretion, refuse his consent under this section where a criminal prosecution is pending in respect of the same act or omission.

Illustrations—A keeps his horses and waggons standing for an unreasonable time in the highway

(a) This is a public nuisance for which a criminal prosecution may be instituted against A

(b) Further a suit may be instituted against A under the present section by the Advocate General, or by two or more persons with the consent in writing of the Advocate General, though no special damage has been caused for an order requiring A to abate the nuisance and for an injunction restraining him from continuing the nuisance. If the nuisance is repeated or continued, notwithstanding the injunction, he is liable for contempt where the decree granting the injunction is passed by a High Court (j) or he may be proceeded against under O 21 r 32 below or he may be punished with imprisonment or fine or both under s. 291 of the Penal Code.

(c) If the horses and waggons are kept standing opposite a man s house so that the access of customers is obstructed, the house is darkened, and the people in it are annoyed by bad smells a suit may be brought against A by the occupiers for damages, the damage so caused being sufficiently special to entitle them to maintain the action (k) The mere fact that a suit has been instituted under this section against A by the Advocate General at the relation of the occupiers or by the occupiers themselves as plaintiffs with the consent of the Advocate-General will not preclude the occupiers from maintaining a private action against A for the special damage caused to them. Quaere whether they can claim damages for the special damage in a suit brought under this section? It is conceived they cannot. It is submitted that the words such other relief as may be appropriate do not include such damages. In England, however persons who have suffered special damage from a public nuisance may join the Attorney General as a co plaintiff in a suit brought by the Attorney General at their relation and the Attorney General may claim an injunction, and the persons specially damnified by the nuisance may claim damages (l) The present section does not warrant such a procedure in India The suit contemplated by this section is a suit of a public nature, exclusively brought to vindicate a public right. The section finds its place in the Part headed Special Proceedings under the division Suits relating to public matters and this affords a sufficient indication of the object of the section.

Nature of proceedings under this section.—Proceedings for a public nuisance in England were formerly commenced by an Information filed by the Attorney General in the High Court of Chancery They are now instituted by action in the High Court of Justice [See R S C O 1 r 1] The action may be brought like the Information—

(1) by the Attorney General acting ex officio of

(2) by the Attorney General at the relation of a private individual

Under the present section a suit for a public nuisance may be instituted—

(1) by the Advocate General acting ex officio or

(2) by the Advocate General at the instance of relators or

(3) by two or more persons having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General.

Difference between suit by Advocate General acting ex officio and suit by him at the relation of private individuals —Except for the purposes of costs there is no difference between an ex officio suit and a suit at the relation of private individuals In both cases the Sovereign as parens patriae sues by the Advocate General (m) When the Attorney General proceeds at the relation of a private person or a corporation he takes the proceeding as representing the Crown and the Crown through the Attorney General is really a party to the litigation. It is quite true that when the proceeding is taken at the relation of a subject the practice is to insert his name in the proceedings as the relator and to make him responsible for the costs but I do not think that this practice in any sense makes the relator a party to the proceedings although he is responsible for the costs any more than (to take a converse case) an infant who brings an action is responsible for the costs of it If I am right it would seem that the practice of making the relator directly responsible for the costs of the action had its origin not in the protection of the defendant but of the Crown (n) When once the matter is in the hands of the Attorney General it becomes substantially a public proceeding in which the Attorney General if there be no relator becomes as prosecutor responsible for the costs while if a relator is introduced the responsibility for costs is upon the latter (o)

Relator s interest in the suit — A relator need not have a personal interest in the matter except as one of the public he need not in fact be himself damaged at all (p)

Interest of persons suing with consent of Advocate General —Persons suing for a public nuisance with the consent of the Advocate General under the section need not have any personal interest in the matter of the suit except as members of the public They are entitled to sue under this section though to use the words of the section no special damage has been caused [to them] In the other words they need not have a cause of action in themselves

Injunction —The following are some of the leading principles by which the Courts are guided in granting injunctions —

1 The injury complained of must be either irreparable or continuous (q) The remedy by way of injunction is therefore not appropriate for damage which is in its nature temporary and intermittent (r) or is accidental and occasional (s) or for an interference with legal rights which is trifling in amount and effect (t)

2 Apprehension of future mischief from something in itself lawful and capable of being done without creating a nuisance is no ground for an injunction (u) There must, if no actual damage is proved be proof of imminent danger and there must also be proof that the apprehended damage will if it comes be very substantial (v)

3 Though no substantial damage is proved, the Court may grant an injunction if the defendants claim the right to continue doing that which the Court has held they are not entitled to do (w)

4 Where an illegal act is committed which in its nature tends to the injury of the public an injunction will be granted to restrain the act without proof of actual injury to the public (x)

5 Where the plaintiff has proved his right to an injunction against a nuisance it is no part of the duty of the Court to enquire in what way the defendant can best remove it the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction at once and it is the duty of the defendant to find his own way out of the difficulty whatever inconvenience or expense it may put him to But where the difficulty of removing the nuisance is considerable the Court may suspend the operation of the injunction for a time (y)

6 No length of time can legalize a public nuisance Though twelve years user may bind the right of an individual yet the public have a right to demand the suppression of a nuisance apart from the length of time for which it may have continued (z)

7 A public nuisance is not excused on the ground that it causes some convenience or advantage [Indian Penal Code s 268]

Declaration'—A suit may be instituted under this section by two or more Mahomedans for a declaration that they are entitled to carry tabuts in procession along a public road for immersion in the sea against persons who obstruct them in doing so and for an injunction restraining interference in the exercise of this right (a)

Other relief —The removal of a public nuisance e.g encroachment on a public street may be directed by the Court under this part of the section (b)

Sub section (2)—The Code of Criminal Procedure contains provisions for the removal of a public nuisance by summary proceedings before a Magistrate (c) The High Court of Calcutta has held that where special damage is caused to a private individual by a public nuisance he has a right of suit against the person causing the nuisance for a removal of the nuisance and a Civil Court may pass a decree to that effect notwithstanding that an order for the like purpose might be made by a Magistrate (d) This right is saved by sub section (2)

Instances of public nuisance — Public or common nuisance affect the King s subjects at large or some considerable portion of them such as the inhabitants of a town and the person therein offending is liable to criminal prosecution. civil proceedings only (e) Building over any part of a public street is a public nuisance for such act must necessarily cause obstruction to persons who may have occasion to use their public right over the part encroached upon. The public is entitled to the full width of the public street however wide it may be and whoever appropriates any part of the street by building over it infringes the right of the public quoad the part built over (f) An obstruction is not the less a nuisance because it is on a part of the street not commonly used or otherwise leaves room enough for the ordinary amount of traffic (g) On the other hand the High Court of Calcutta has held that as regards tidal navigable rivers a slight encroachment does not necessarily constitute a public nuisance. It seems to us rather the Court said that there must be some evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in section 268 [of the Indian Penal Code] (h)

Acts which merely offend the sentiments of a class do not amount to a public nuisance In India it must often happen that acts are done by the followers of one creed which must be offensive to the sentiments of those who follow other creeds. Upon this principle it has been held that the placing of a Mahomedan symbol in the neighbourhood of a Hindu temple is not a public nuisance though likely to cause annoyance to Hindus (i) Similarly it is not a public nuisance to expose on the verandah of a house meat cut up for a dinner though it may annoy the feelings of Jains frequenting a temple close by the house (j) But wilfully slaughtering cattle in a public street so that the groans and blood of the animals could be heard and seen by the passers by is a public nuisance for it must necessarily cause annoyance to every one of the passers by Hindu European Mahomedan or other who was not utterly devoid not merely of refinement but also of all proper feelings (k)

92 [S 539] (1) In the case of any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust, the Advocate General, or two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General, may institute a suit, whether contentious or not, in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the trust is situate to obtain a decree—

1 The words "public purposes of a charitable or religious nature" have been substituted for the words "public charitable or religious purposes" to remove the misconception that "public" is merely co ordinate with "charitable" or "religious"

2 The words "whether contentious or not" have been added to give effect to a Calcutta decision See note below "Whether contentious or not"

3 The words "in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction" have been substituted for the words "in the High Court or the District Court"

4 The words "or any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government" have been added in order to invest Courts subordinate to District Courts with power to try cases under this section

5 Clause (a) is new It is intended to supersede a Madras decision and to give effect to the Calcutta Bombay and Allahabad decisions cited in note below "Clause (a) removing any trustee"

6 Clause (d) is also new It gives legislative recognition to a Bombay decision cited in note below "Clause (d) directing accounts and inquiries"

7 Sub section (2) is new It is intended to give effect to the view of the section taken by the Bombay High Court that this section is mandatory and to supersede the decision to the contrary of the other High Courts See note below "Sub section (2) this section is mandatory"

Romilly s Act—The present section has been borrowed in part from 52 Geo 3 c. 101 called Romilly s Act As to the applicability of decisions under that statute to cases under the present section see the undermentioned case (l)

Object of the section— The real object of the special provisions of this section seems to us to be clear Persons interested in any trust were if they could all join, always competent to maintain a suit against any trustee for his removal for breach of trust but where the joining of all of them was inconvenient or impracticable it was considered desirable that some of them might sue without joining the others provided they obtained the consent of the Advocate General or of the Collector of the District and this condition was imposed to prevent an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits being brought against trustees by different persons interested in the trust (m)

Representative suit and res judicata—The suit contemplated by this section is a representative suit that is a suit which is prosecuted by individuals not for their own interests but as representatives of the general public (n) A decree in a suit under this section will therefore operate as res judicata under s 11 Explanation VI of the Code (o)

Jurisdiction—Where the trustees and the trust fund are within the jurisdiction of a Court but the charity is to be founded in a territory outside the jurisdiction the Court has jurisdiction to pass a decree declaring the trusts upon which the fund is to be held, but it cannot go further in the way of settling a scheme and it will leave it to the Court of the place in which the charity is to be carried out to settle the scheme (p) Nor can a Court apply the cy pres doctrine extra territorium (q)

Who may sue under this section—A suit under this section may be brought—

(1) by the Advocate General and outside the Presidency towns by the Collector or such officer as the Local Government may appoint in that behalf [see s. 93] or

(2) by two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General

Interest in the trust—When a suit under this section is not instituted by the Advocate General it must be brought by at least two persons and such persons must have an interest in the trust S 539 of the Code of 1877 contained the words a direct interest Those words seem to have been taken from the judgment of Lord Eldon in In re the Bedford Charity (r) Those words also occurred in s 539 of the Code of 1882 That section was amended by s 44 of Act 7 of 1888 and the words an interest were substituted for the words a direct interest It must have appeared to the Legislature that the limitation of a direct interest was not expedient in India and hence the section must have been amended (s) The effect of the amendment has been to widen the class of p rsons who are entitled to institute a suit under this section (t) Thus p rsons entitled to worship in a temple have such an interest in the trust as to enable them to institute a suit under this section against the trustees of the temple (u) Similarly persons residing in a village whose business it was to conduct pilgrims to a shrine and perform the worship of the idol on their behalf were held to have a sufficient interest to entitle them to sue the shevaks or ministers of the idol under this section (v) Likewise worshippers at a mosque have an interest

within the meaning of this section in the trusts of the mosque (w) If the persons suing have an interest in the trust it is not necessary that they should have been personally affected by any act done by the person sued (x) But the interest must be an existing interest and not a mere contingency the mere possibility of succession to the managership of trust properties in respect of which the suit is brought is not sufficient to give a right to sue (y) It has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that the interest contemplated by this section must be a present and substantial interest and not sentim ntal or remote Thus public Hindu temples are prima facie taken to be dedicated for the use of all Hindus resorting to them But the bare possibility however remote that a Hindu of another place might desire to visit a temple does not give him an interest in the trust sufficient to entitle him to sue under this section Hence where a suit was brought under this section by a Hindu residing in Madras and another residing in Tellicherry in respect of a temple situated in Tellicherry and it appeared that the former had gone to worship in the temple on one or two occasions in the past and might go there to worship in the future if business took him to Tellicherry it was held that though he had a right as a Hindu to worship in the temple he had not such an interest in the trust as to entitle him to sue under this section (z) A different view has been taken by the Lahore High Court (a) It has been held by the Judicial Committee that descendants of the founder of a public Hindu chattiram although only in the female line are persons having an interest in the trust and consequently they are entitled to maintain a suit under this section even though they might never themselves make use of the chattiram (b)

Consent of Advocate General—The consent in writing required by this section must be a specific permission given to two or more persons by name a permission given to one applicant by name and another is not a sufficient compliance with the terms of this section (c) The High Court of Bombay has held that a suit under this section brought by only one plaintiff with the consent of the Advocate General is bad at its institution and the plaint cannot be amended by the addition of a second plaintiff though the Advocate General may consent to the amendment the reason given being that the section nowhere speaks of the consent of the Advocate General to an amendment of the plaint and that a suit which was bad at its inception is not bettered by its amend m nt (d) On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that persons interested may be added as parties to the suit with the consent of the Advocate General under O 1 r 10 It has thus been held by that Court that if a suit is brought by A alone under this section (e) or by A and B of whom B has no interest in the trust (f) the plaint may be amended by adding C a person interested as a party plaintiff in either case with the consent of the Advocate General Similarly it has been held by that Court that if a suit be brought by A and B and neither of them has any interest in the trust the plaint may be amended by adding the Advocate General as a plaintiff on his application (g)

The consent in writing required by this section is a condition precedent to the institution of the suit to which such consent relates If therefore no valid consent is given before the institution of the suit the suit must be dismissed, or the plaintiff may be allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit The defect cannot be rectified after the institution of the suit (h) And where such consent is given the suit must be confined to the matters included in the consent it is not competent to the Court to grant reliefs other than those included in the terms of the consent (i) Further where a suit is brought under this section no amendment should be permitted without the sanction of the Advocate General. Where a plaint in a suit brought under this section is amended without the consent of the Advocate General e g where a new party is added as a defendant and possession of the trust property is claimed from him the Court must dismiss the suit (j) It is an invariable practice in the Bombay Presidency for the Advocate General to endorse his consent upon the plaint (k)

The Advocate General in giving his consent has to exercise his judgment in the matter and see not only whether the persons suing are persons who have an interest in the trust but also whether the trust is a public trust of the character defined in the section and whether there are prima facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust (l) Where the sanction given by the Advocate General is so worded as to indicate that the Advocate General has not exercised his judgment it is not a defect fatal to the suit but a mere irregularity falling within the scope of s 99 hence the decree in the suit will not be interfered with in appeal unless the irregularity is shown to have affected the decision of the suit on the merits (m)

When an order is made against the trustee of a charity under s 5 (3) of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act 1920 and the trustee without reasonable excuse fails to comply with it he shall be deemed to have committed a breach of trust affording ground for a suit under s 92 of the Code and such suit may so far as it is based on such failure be instituted without the previous consent of the Advocate General

Public purposes —This section relates to those charities only in which the public are interested. A trust for a public Hindu temple is a trust for a public purpose of a religious nature within the meaning of this section (n) A mutt that is otherwise private does not become public simply because some persons are fed when gurupuja is performed and a water pandal is maintained in the mutt during the hot season (o) But where a number of the public had always used a temple to which a dharmashala was attached and the surplus funds not required for the service of the temple were to be applied to feeding travellers and maintaining a adavart it was held that the intention of the founder was to devote the property to public purposes of a religious and charitable nature (p) A trust is not the less a trust for a public purpose because the main object of the trust is the support of fakirs of a particular sect and the propagation of the tenets of that sect (q)

Any alleged breach of trust —These words are not equivalent to any alleged breach of any admitted trust It is not therefore a condition precedent to the applicability of the section that the trust alleged by the plaintiffs is admitted by the defendants (r)

either be a breach of trust or the directions of the Court must be necessary for the administration of the trust The directions referred to in this section are such as are necessary for the carrying out of the trust and as are given to a trustee either the existing trustee where there is one or the new trustee where one is to be appointed. The nature of the reliefs (specified in the section) shows what is meant by the words deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust (s) The mere appointment of a Mutawalli is not a direction within the meaning of this section (t)

Whether contentious or not—These words are new They are intended to give effect to a decision of the Calcutta High Court under s 539 of the Code of 1882 that the section was not confined to non contentious proceedings and that it applied to contentious suits also (u) and to the opinion to the same effect of Best and Weir JJ in an earlier Madras case (v)

Who may be sued under this section—It is not necessary that the defendant should be either a de jure or de facto trustee otherwise no suit can be brought under this section in a case in which all trustees are dead or refuse to act (w) Thus a suit may be brought under this section against persons in possession of the trust property who claim adversely to the trust that is claim to be the owners of the property (x) or against persons who deny the validity of the trust (y) But a suit against one who is merely a servant for misappropriation of the trust property does not fall under this section ( ) See notes below Trustee and Suits for possession of trust property

Order for security for costs against defendant trustee—Section 10 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act 1920 provides that if in any suit instituted under the present section the Court trying such suit may if on the application of the plaintiff and after hearing the defendant and making such inquiry as it thinks fit it is satisfied that such an order is necessary in the public interest direct the defendant either to furnish security for any expenditure incurred or likely to be incurred by the plaintiff in instituting and maintaining such suit or to deposit from any money in his hands as trustee of the trust to which the suit relates such sum as such Court consid rs sufficient to meet such expenditure in whole or in part and that when any money has been so deposited the Court may make over to the plaintiff the whole or any part of such sum for the conduct of the suit but that before making over any sum to the plaintiff the Court shall take security from the plaintiff for the refund of the same in the event of such refund being subsequently ordered by the Court

Clause (a) removing any trustee—This clause is new Though this clause did not occur in the corresponding s 539 of the Code of 1882 it was held by the High Courts of Calcutta Bombay and Allahabad (a) following an earlier decision of the Madras High Court (b) that a suit for the removal of a trustee of a public trust and for the appointment of a new trustee came under that section though the removal of a trustee was not one of the reliefs specified in that section Such a relief it was said was either covered by the words such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require or it was implied in the clause providing for the appointment of new trustees On the other hand, the Madras High Court held in a later case that such a suit did not come under that section (c) Sub s (1) cl (a) of the present section gives effect to the Calcutta Bombay and Allahabad decisions A suit for the removal of a trustee must therefore be instituted in conformity with the provisions of this ection The High Court of Madras has held that a suit by the trustees of a temple for a declaration that the appointment by the Devastanam Committee of the defendant as a trustee in place of a decea ed trustee is invalid and for an injunction to restrain him from interfering with the management of the temple is in effect a suit for the removal of the defendant from the office of trustee and that it cannot be instituted without the sanction required by this or the next section (d) A similar view has been taken by the Patna High Court (e) This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Bombay on the ground that to bring a suit within this section there must either be an alleged breach of trust or the direction of the Court must be deemed necessary for the administration of th trust and that neither of these conditions was present in the Madras case The Bombay case was similar to the Madras case and it was held that the case did not fall within this section (f)

In a suit under this section by two trustees of a temple against a co trustee for his removal the Court has the power to investigate charges of misconduct made by the defendant against the plaintiff and even to remove them (g)

In framing a scheme of management und r this section [see clause (g)] it is desirable to include a provision for the removal of trustees for breach of trust for where such a provision is included the removal of a defaulting trustee may be obtained by an application in execution of the decree and the costs and trouble of a regular suit which would otherwise be probably necessary may thus be avoided (h) But some recent Madras cases consider such a provision ultra vires (i)

In connection with the removal of a trustee it may be noted that there is no hard and fast rule that because a manager of a shrine has arrogated to himself the position of owner he should be removed from the office of trustee Each case must be decided with reference to its circumstances (j) Thus it has been held that mere lax and improvident management on the part of the manager of a shrine fostered by the belief that he was entitled to manage the trust property free from control and very much as though he was its absolute owner is no ground for removing him from the trust (k)

Trustee —A person appointed trustee by the Court though his appointment may be impeached as being illegal is a trustee within the meaning of clause (a) and not a trespasser (l) So is a trustee de son tort that is a person who has not been appointed trustee b it who takes charge of the trust property and purports to manage it as trust property (m) The Acharya of a temple is a constructive trustee within the meaning of this section and he may be sued as such (n) And so is the head of a mutt (o)

Clause (b) appointing new trustee—A suit for the appointment of new trustees of a temple on the ground that the defendants are not lawful trustees and that the office of trustees is therefore vacant is a suit under clause (b) of this section (p)

Under this section the Court in sanctioning a scheme may provide for the appointment of additional or new trustees though such appointment may not be in conformity with the original constitution of the trust or with the rules in force in respect to it (q)

Clause (d) directing accounts and inquiries—This clause is new Under the corresponding s 539 of the Code of 1882 the High Court of Bombay held that a suit to remove the trustees of a public charity and to compel them to account and to make good the losses sustained by the charity by reason of default on the part of the trustees and for the appointment of new trustees was a suit within that section though a relief for accounts was not one of the reliefs specifically mentioned in that section. Such a relief it was said was covered by the words further or other relief (r) The present clause gives legislative recognition to the above decision (s)

Clause (e) apportionment of income—A suit for a declaration as to what proportion of the trust property [e g offerings placed by devotees before an idol] should be allocated to the pujaris (officiating priests) and what to the guravs (temple servants) relates to a relief covered by cl (e) of the section (t)

Clause (f) authorizing trust property to be let—An application by a mutawali for sanction of the Court to grant a lease of the wakf property is not a suit under this section (u)

Clause (g) settling a scheme—This section vests a very wide discretion in the Court as regards directions to be given for the administration of public trusts In giving effect to the provisions of the section and in appointing new trustees and settling a scheme the Court is entitled to take into consideration not merely the wishes of the founder so far as they can be ascertained but also the past history of the institution and the way in which the management is carried on theretofore in conjunction with other existing conditions that may have grown up since its foundation (v) The Court may refuse to frame a scheme where no mismanagement is proved (w)

A scheme framed by the Court may be varied if good cause is shown (x) But where a scheme is once settled it precludes a suit to establish a private right to manage the property [e g hereditary trusteeship] which if established would interfere with the scheme settled by Court (y)

The Court has power under this section to frame a scheme in respect of a public temple though it be under the control of a Temple Committee constituted under the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 (z) But where a trust is a private trust e g for a family idol the settlement of a scheme under this section is inappropriate (a)

In decrees passed under this section liberty is generally reserved to the parties to apply to the Court as occasion arises as to the effect of such a clause see the under mentioned case (b) The Madras High Court has in recent cases held that liberty to apply for modification of the scheme or for a relief coming under section 92 is ultra vires (c) although such clauses have appeared in schemes approved by the Privy Council (d) The High Court of Rangoon has followed the Madras decisions (e) These decisions it is submitted are incorrect The suit having been filed with the consent of the Advocate General and the Court being in sei in of the case it is perfectly competent to it to provide for a modification of the scheme and no fresh suit is necessary to modify the scheme

Where it is quite clear that a public trust has been properly constituted by will it is not necessary that a suit for the administration of the estate of the testator should precede a suit under this section But it is otherwise where it is doubtful whether there would be funds sufficient for the charitable bequest In the latter case an administration suit may become necessary before any scheme can be framed under this section (f) Where the trust funds are not ascertained and the defendants are accountable for their management of the trust property the proper course is to take the accounts before a scheme is framed (g)

In a suit brought under this section in respect of a public religious trust the Court has jurisdiction to frame a scheme regulative of the conduct of the institution as the owners of moneys and property which it possesses even in cases where the Acharya as the head of its spiritual and temporal affairs is worshipped by the members of the sect as the representative of the god. In drawing up the scheme however the Court must not encroach upon the rights and prerogatives of the Acharya as a religious preceptor of the community but while the institutional trust must be respected the sect and body of worshippers for whose benefit it was set up have the protection of the Court against their property being the subject of abuse speculation and waste (h)

Where provision is made in a scheme for an application being made to the Court for the purposes mentioned in it and an order is made on the application the order is not one execution and no appeal lies from it (i)

Clause (h) further or other relief — The words granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require must be read with what has preceded as referring to further relief to which the party may be entitled which arises out of the existence of the trust in respect of which the suit has been brought Therefore where the only relief claimed in a suit is for a declaration that certain property is wakf property the suit does not come within the purview of this section. Such a relief does not come within the words further or other relief (j) The general clause dealing with further or other relief ought to be read with the preceding specific clauses and the nature of the eliefs which may be properly granted under it is of the same character as the relief which may be granted under the preceding clauses The specific clauses are not m rely illustrative but furnish an indication of the nature of the relief which may be granted in a suit under this section (k)

The question as to the precise scope of clause (h) is of great importance for if the words such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require mean relief of the same nature as clauses (a) to (g) a relief in a suit against strangers to a trust for a declaration that property in their possession is trust property would be outside the scope of this section as it would not be of the same nature as clauses (a) to (g) and the suit could be maintained without the consent of the Advocate General This very question arose in Abdur Rahim v Abu Mahomed Barkat Ali (l) where the Privy Council held that a suit for a declaration that property belongs to a wakf can be maintained by Mahomedans interested in the wakf without the consent of the Advocate General. It was argued in that case on behalf of the defendants that the words further or other relief must be taken not in connection with the previous clauses (a) to (g) but in connection with the nature of the suit—namely any relief other than (a) to (g) that the case of an alleged breach of an express or constructive trust may require in the circumstances of any particular case and that a breach of trust having been alleged the suit came under this section and it could not be maintained without the consent of the Advocate General. But this argument was not accepted and it was held that the words further or other relief in clause (h) must on general principles be taken to mean relief of the same nature as clauses (a) to (g) and that as the relief for a declaration that the property belonged to the wakf was not of that nature the suit was outside the scope of the section. Their Lordships said that the construction suggested on behalf of the defendants would cut down substantive rights which existed before the enactment of the Code of 1908 and a Code regulating procedure should not be construed as having that effect in the absence of express words Before the enactment of that Code a person interested in a public trust had the right to maintain a suit for such a declaration as the above without the consent of the Advocate General and this is the substantive right referred to above It follows that when a suit is brought for some of the reliefs mentioned in this section with the consent of the Advocate General and a prayer for a declaration is afterwards added and strangers to the trust are joined as defendants the suit ceases to that extent to be one under sec 92 or of a representative character

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a prayer that a deed of trust may be construed by the Court and that the true scope and object of the trust fund may be determined by the Court comes within the words further or other relief (m) See note below Suits merely for a declaration of trust

Suits outside the scope of the section—This section does not apply unless—

(1) there is a trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature

(2) there is a breach alleged of such trust or the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of such trust and

(3) the relief claimed is one or other of the reliefs mentioned in the section (n) [see note below sub sec (2)]

If all the three conditions mentioned above are fulfilled the suit must be instituted in conformity with the provisions of this section that is to say it must be instituted either by the Advocate General or by two or more persons interested in the trust with the consent of the Advocate General if it is not so instituted it must be dismissed [see notes above Consent of Advocate General]. But if any one of the three conditions is absent the suit is outside the scope of this section and it may be instituted in the ordinary manner (o) The mere fact that a suit relates to a public charitable or religious trust or that it relates to property held on such trust is not sufficient to bring it within the scope of this section [see notes below Suits to enforce private rights and Suits for possession of trust property against trespassers and against alienees from trustees] At the same time a suit which is clearly within the scope of this section cannot be treated as one outside its scope because in addition to reliefs under this section it claims reliefs not allowed by the section [see notes below Suits for removal of trustees, etc and Where some of the reliefs are outside the scope of this section

Suits to enforce private rights —The suit contemplated by this section is a representative suit [see note above Representative suit and res judicata] Suits brought not to vindicate or establish the right of the public in respect of a public trust but to remedy an infringement of an individual right or to vindicate a private right do not fall within this section (p) Such suits are instituted in the ordinary manner and not under this section. The following are instances of suits of this character —

But in a later Calcutta case [Mohiuddin v Sayiduddin (1893) 20 Cal. 810] it was pointed out that the reasoning of the Allahabad cases showing that the right of worship of each worshipper in a Mahomedan mosque or religious endowment was an independent right wholly irrespective of the rights of the other worshippers was correct The view taken in the earlier Calcutta decisions is it is submitted not correct (q) and it cannot be sustained since the decision of the Privy Council in Abdur Rahim v Abu Mahomed Barkat Ali (r)

Suits for a declaration and for possession of trust property against third persons that is strangers to the trust—Suits against strangers to the trust that is against trespassers and against transferees from trustees for a declaration that property in their hands is trust property and for possession are outside the scope of this section. The reason is that the relief claimed is not one of those mentioned in clauses (a) to (h) Such suits must be instituted in the ordinary manner and not under this section (s) This has now been definitely held by the Privy Council in Abdur Rahim v Mahomed Barkat Ali (t) [see case (1) below] The following are instances of suits of this character —

Suits for removal of trustees for unlawful alienation of trust property and against transferees from those trustees—A common type of suits under this section is a suit against the trustee of a charity for his removal on the ground that he has unlawfully alienated the trust property treating it as his private property and for the appointment of a new trustee in his place It is clear that such a suit is within this section for the relief claimed is one under cl (a) of this section and the ground on which the relief is claimed is a breach of trust in alienating the property It is also clear that the Court cannot remove the trustee unless it finds that the property is trust property and that it has been wrongfully alienated by the trustee The question to be considered is whether the Court has power in the absence of the alienee to declare that the property is trust property and that the alienation is unlawful It has been held by the High Court of Madras that an alienee is not a proper party to a suit under this section and that if he is joined as a party the suit as against him should be dismissed But this it has been held does not preclude the Court from determining in a suit against the trustee alone whether the property is trust property and declaring if it is so found that it is trust property But the transferee not being a party to the suit is not bound by the declaration and if a suit is subsequently brought against him for possession of the property it is open to him to contend that the property is not trust property (u) A similar view has been taken by the High Court of Calcutta (v) On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the alienee though not a neces ary party to the suit (w) is a proper party (x) and that if he is joined as a party and the Court declares that the property is trust property he will be bound by such declaration in a subsequent suit for possession against him (y) The High Court of Bombay has gone further and held that the transferee is not only a proper but a necessary party and that no such declaration can be made in his absence ( ) But all the High Courts are agreed that in a suit such as the above a decree cannot be passed against the alienee directing him to deliver possession of the property to the plaintiffs though he is a party to the suit as such relief is neither specifically mentioned in the section nor implied in cl. (h) and that the remedy of the newly appointed trustee is to institute a separate suit for possession against him (a) The proposition that the Court has no power under this section to pa s a decree against an alienee directing him to deliver possession to the plaintiffs is in accordance with a recent ruling of the Privy Council where it was held that a relief or a remedy against third persons that is strangers to the trust was not within the scope of this section (b) It is submitted that the Court has also no power under this section to make a declaration that the property in suit is not trust property so as to bind the alienee such a relief also being outside the scope of the section

Suits only for a declaration of trust—This section presupposes the existence of a trust for the administration of which it is necessary to make provision. Hence it does not apply to a suit brought solely for the purpose of having a declaration of the Court that certain property is wakf the fact of endowment being denied on the other side (c) Nor does this section apply to a suit brought merely for a declaration that the plaintiffs are trustees of an endowment (d) See note above Suits for a declaration and for possession of trust property against third persons i e strangers to the trust

Suits for a declaration that the defendant is not a properly appointed trustee and for an injunction against him—See note above Clause (a) removing any trustee

Courts competent to try suits under this section—A suit under this section must be instituted either in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government But this does not empower the Local Government to direct the transfer of a particular suit pending in a District Court to a particular Judge The authority must be a general one to receive suits under this section (e)

The expression principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in this section does not include the Court of an Additional District Judge appointed under s 8 of the Civil Courts Act XII of 1887 (f) unless the District Judge has under sub sec (2) of that section assigned to him the functions of a District Judge relating to all suits cognizable by the District Judge (g)

Where a suit is brought against an executor in the Court of a Subordinate Judge for the administration of the testator s estate the mere facts, that the will contains directions for applying portions of the estate to charitable purposes does not bring the suit within this section The Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to entertain such a suit but if any questions relating to charitable bequests arise before him and a scheme has to be framed under this section he should hold the amount appropriated for charities in the possession of a Receiver until the Advocate General or the Collector obtains the directions of the District Court (h)

Where some of the reliefs are outside the scope of the section—When some of the reliefs claimed are outside the scope of the section the Court is not justified in returning the plaint It should require the plaintiff to amend his plaint by confining himself to reliefs within the section or it might wait till it came to pronounce judgment and dismiss the suit as to reliefs without the section (i) So in a suit by worshippers for the appointment of trustees and for the ejectment of trespassers the Court may appoint trustees without passing a decree in ejectment (j) But worshippers cannot sue under O 1 r 8 to recover the property unless they are supported by the trustees They should sue to remove the trustees first and then let the new trustees sue in ejectment (k)

Sub section (2) this section is mandatory—The Legislature has by enacting this section constituted a special tribunal for the trial of a class of suits which it has removed from the cognizance of the ordinary Courts Those are suits for any of the reliefs specified in sub sec (1) in cases where there is an alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust This class of suits can only be instituted in the special Courts mentioned in this section and they can only be brought either by the Advocate General or by two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General This is enacted by sub s (2) of the present section Under the corresponding section 539 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 it was doubtful whether every suit of the character described above was to be instituted in the manner aforesaid Sub-s (2) makes it clear that every such suit must be so instituted it enacts that no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub sec (1) shall be instituted without the consent of the Advocate General (l) But sub sec (2) must be read with sub sec (1) Reading sub-sec (2) with sub sec (1) it follows that it is not every suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub sec (1) that should be brought with the consent of the Advocate General but those suits only which besides claiming any of those reliefs are brought by individuals as representatives of the general public Accordingly a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that a suit by a trustee of a public religious trust against a co trustee for accounts does not fall within this section though the relief claimed is the one specified in sub sec (1) cl. (d) Such a suit is not a representative suit The relief is sought not in the larger interest of the public but merely for the purpose of vindicating the private rights of one of the trustees and of enabling him to discharge the duties and liabilities which are imposed upon him by the trust (m)

The doubt referred to in the preceding paragraph arose in the following way The Code of 1859 did not contain any special provisions for the institution of suits relating to public charities Such provisions were introduced for the first time by s 539 of the Code of 1877 They were reproduced in s 539 of the Code of 1882 and they now find a place in sub sec (1) of the present section But neither the Code of 18 7 nor the Code of 1882 contained any provision corresponding to sub s (2) Before the enactment of the Code of 1877 suits relating to public charitable or religious trusts could be instituted in the ordinary Courts by certain persons as plaintiffs Thus—

(1) persons appointed supervisors over trustees could sue in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit for the removal of the trustees for malversation and to obtain the appointment in their place of other fit and proper persons (n) similarly

(2) one or more of the members of a defined class of the general public [such as the Satchasi community of Chatra] could sue on behalf of the whole class with the leave of the Court under s 30 [now O 1 r 8] in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit to obtain a declaration of their right to take part in the management of the worship of a goddess (o)

It is obvious that the above suits fall within the purview of the present section. They also came within the terms of s 539 of the earlier Codes In the absence of any provision in s 539 similar to that contained in sub s (2) the question arose whether these suits were to be instituted in the special Courts mentioned in s 539 and by the Advocate General as plaintiff or whether they could be instituted as before in ordinary Courts and by persons who could have sued if s 539 had not been enacted The High Court of Bombay held that s 539 was mandatory in other words that every suit of the character mentioned in that section must be brought in accordance with its provisions and not otherwise. Therefore the suits referred to above could not be brought by the supervisors as plaintiffs in the one case and by the members of the community in the other but they had to be instituted either by the Advocate General or by two or more persons interested in the trust after obtaining the sanction of the Advocate General and further these suits could only be brought in the special Courts indicated in that section, namely the High Court or the District Court as the case might be (p) On the other hand the other High Courts held that section 539 was permissive and that it did not take away the right of suit which existed prior to and independently of it According to the latter view suits of the character mentioned above could, notwithstanding the enactment of section 539 be brought as before by the abovenamed parties as plaintiffs in any Court competent to entertain those suits and it was not obligatory to institute them in accordance with the provisions of s 539 (q) Sub section (2) gives effect to the Bombay decisions and supersedes the decisions of the other High Courts It provides in distinct terms that no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub section (1) shall be instituted except in conformity with the provisions of that sub section At the same time it declares that the special provisions of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 for the institution of suits governed by that Act are not affected by the provisions of this section The provisions of that Act and their bearing on the present section are discussed in the next paragraph public Regulation 19 of 1810 was passed whereby the general superintendence of all the religious and charitable endowments referred to above was vested in the Board of Revenue That Regulation applied to endowments in Bengal A similar Regulation Regulation 7 of 1817 was subsequently passed to provide for like endowments in the Madras Presidency (r) Several years after the passing of these Regulations it was thought that the connection of a Christian Government with the religious establishments of Hindus and Mahommedans was inexpedient and a report was therefore called for by the Government of India in the year 1841 from the Collectors of all Districts with a view to divest themselves of the management of religious endowments and transfer the management to properly qualified individuals As a result Act 20 of 1863 was passed whereby such of the provisions of the abovementioned Regulations as related to religious endowments were repealed, and provision was made for the transfer of all such endowments in certain cases to trustees and in others to committees (s 3 8) But the duty of superintending charitable endowments imposed on the Board of Revenue by the old Regulations is still retained, and, in fact expre s care is taken in the Act to declare that this duty as to charitable endowments is not intended to be affected or interfered with (ss 21 23)

The Religious Endowments Act applies only to public religious endowments as did the old Regulations It does not apply to private religious endowments S 14 of the Act provides that any person interested in any mosque temple or religious establishment may sue the trustees or members of a committee for any misfeasance breach of trust or neglect of duty committed by them in respect of the trust vested in them and the Court may in such suit direct the specific performance of any act by them and may decree damages and costs against them and may also direct the removal of any of the trustees or any member of a committee A suit which does not charge the trustees or member of a committee with misfeasance breach of trust or neglect of duty does not fall under that section (s) S 18 provides that no suit under the Act shall be instituted without th leave of the Court

The Act is in force in all Presidencies except the Pr sidency of Bombay where it is in force in North Canara only But it does not apply to presidency towns so that a suit instituted in a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original jurisdiction inherited from the Supreme Court charging neglect of duty on the part of a temple trustee does not require the leave of the Court under s 18 of the Act (t)

After the passing of the Regulations above referred to the Board of Revenue took over the management of some endowments but in the large majority of cases they did not take charge of endowments created by private individuals The operation of the Act however is not confined to such endowments as had actually been taken under the management of the Board of Revenue under the old Regulations The Act applies to every public religious endowment to which the provisions of the old Regulations applied, that is to say to every public religious endowment created by the preceding Governments of this country and by individual whether the management of the endowment was taken over by the Board of Revenue or not (u)

Death of a plaintiff pending suit—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that where a suit is brought by two persons under this section and one of them dies pending the suit the suit abates unless some other person is brought on the record in place of the deceased. Such person must be one who has an interest in the trust and he must have obtained the consent of the Advocate General as required by this section (w) On the other hand the High Court of Madras has held that a suit brought under this section being a representative suit no question of abatement can arise and the Court has power under O 1 r 10 (2) to add other persons interested in the trust as parties not because they are the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff but because they had become parties to the representative suit by the very fact of its having been instituted on behalf of all persons interested in the trust and thatthe consent of the Advocate General to such addition is not necessary (x) The Madras decisions have been followed in Lahore (y) and Rangoon (z) It has since been held by the Judicial Committee that where one of the two plaintiffs dies the suit does not abate as a suit under this section is a representaive suit (a) The Allahabad decision it is submitted is not correct.

Death of defendant trustee pending suit—Where a suit is brought under this section against a trustee not only for his removal but for framing a scheme and the scheme is one of the main reliefs sought the suit does not abate on the death of the trustee and his successor in office may be brought on the record as a party defendant (b) The suit of course would abate if it was solely for the removal of the trustee

Specific Relief Act 1877 s 42—Where a suit falls within this section the plaintiffs cannot evade the requirements of the Code by framing the suit as one under s 42 of the Specific Relief Act (c) At the same time where the suit is one maintainable under this section and the plaintiff seeks any of the reliefs specified in the section s 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply Thus if a suit is brought under this section for a declaration that the defendants are not the lawful trustees and for the appointment of new trustees the suit will not be dismissed because consequential relief such as delivery of the trust property to the new trustees is not claimed (d) [Sec 42 of the Specific Relief Act provides in effect that where a suit is brought for a

Dismissal of suit by trustees no bar to suit by Advocate General —The fact that de jure managers and trustees of a public charity have been held in a previous suit to have lost their right by limitation to oust de facto trustees does not confer on the latter immunity from suit on the part of the Advocate General under this section (e)

Limitation—Accounts against trustee de son tort —A suit for account under this section against a trustee de son tort is governed not by s 10 of the Limitation Act, but by art 120 of the Limitation Act Such a trustee is only liable to render accounts for 6 years preceding the suit (f)

Relators cannot appeal in their own right —Where a suit instituted under this section by the Advocate General at the instance of relators is dismissed and the Advocate General does not think fit to appeal the relators are not competent to file an appeal on their own account against the decree dismissing the suit (g) The reason is that relators are not parties to the suit (h)

Supplemental Proceedings

Supplemental proceedings

94 [New] In order to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated the Court may, if it is so prescribed,—

(a) issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not give security for his appearance, and if he fails to comply with any order for security commit him to the civil prison,

(b) direct the defendant to furnish security to produce any property belonging to him and to place the same at the disposal of the Court or order the attachment of any property,

(c) grant a temporary injunction and in case of disobedience commit the person guilty thereof to the civil prison and order that his property be attached and sold,

(d) appoint a receiver of any property and enforce the performance of his duties by attaching and selling his property,

(e) make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient

This section summarizes the general powers of the Court in regard to interlocutory proceedings The details of procedure have been relegated to Schedule I

Clauses (a) and (b) Arrest and attachment before judgment.—See O 38 below

Clauses (c) and (e) Temporary injunctions and interlocutory orders — See O 39 below

Clause (d) Appointment of receiver —See O 40 below See also notes to s 51 Receiver in execution proceedings

Compensation for obtaining arrest attachment or injunction on insufficient grounds

95 [Ss 491, 497] (1) Where, in any suit in which an arrest or attachment has been effected or a temporary injunction granted under the last preceding section,—

(a) it appears to the Court that such arrest, attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds, or

(b) the suit of the plaintiff fails and it appears to the Court that there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the same,

the defendant may apply to the Court, and the Court may, upon such application, award against the plaintiff by its order such amount, not exceeding one thousand rupees, as it deems a reasonable compensation to the defendant for the expense or injury caused to him

Provided that a Court shall not award, under this section, an amount exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction

(2) An order determining any such application shall bar any suit for compensation in respect of such arrest, attachment or injunction

Changes introduced by the section —This section corresponds with ss 491 and 497 of the Code of 1882 except that the words by its order have been substituted for the words in its decree The words by its order indicate that the award should no longer form part of the decree but should be embodied in a separate order The order is now made appealable by s 104

Scope of the section —This section provides for compensation to the defendant in the two following cases —

I (1) Where an arrest or attachment before judgment has been effected or a temporary injunction has been granted (see Orders 38 and 39) and

(2) such arrest attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds

II (1) Where an arrest or attachment before judgment has been effected or a temporary injunction has been granted

(2) the plaintiff fails in the suit and

(3) there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the suit

In case II it is not necessary to show that the arrest attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds It is enough if the plaintiff fails in the suit and there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the suit The principle is that a plaintiff who has obtained an arrest attachment or injunction by instituting a suit without any probable ground should be punished as much as a plaintiff who has obtained the process on insufficient grounds

This section is no bar to a regular suit —This section provides a summary remedy for an injured defendant and enables him to seek compensation for the injury done to him by the plaintiff by an application to the Court instead of by a suit But the remedy under this section is optional and an injured defendant may if he so choses institute a regular suit against the plaintiff for compensation for wrongful arrest attachment or injunction (n) This clearly appears from sub section (2) which impliedly recognizes the right of a defendant to institute a regular suit for compensation (o) In a suit for compen ation however the plaintiff must prove malice in fact in addition to the facts required to be proved by this section (p) But whether the proceeding is by way of suit or by an application under this section the defendant is not entitled to any compensation unless the attachment has been effected Merely procuring an order for attachment before judgment however maliciously is not sufficient to entitle the defendant to compensation (q) As to the period of limitation for a suit see Limitation Act 1908 Sch I arts 19 29 36 and 42 and al o the undermentioned cases (r) As to suits for damages for temporary injunction improperly obtained see the undermentioned ca es (s)

On insufficient grounds —The e words are equivalent to ' without reason able and probable cause (t)

An award under this section is a bar to a regular suit —Once an appli cation is made by a defendant under this section for compensation for wrongful arrest attachment or injunction and an order is made under this section the defendant cannot institute a regular suit for compensation for the same wrong whether any com pensation is awarded to him or not In other words the disposal of an application under this section has the effect of res judicata so as to bar any subsequent suit in respect of the same cause of action Note that it is the disposal of the application and not the mere presenting of the application that is a bar to a regular suit

Amount of compensation —The amount of compensation that may be awarded under this section cannot exceed Rs 1 000 Where a defendant claims a larger amount of compensation he must institute a regular suit

Right of defendant not served with summons to apply for compensation under this section —If a defendant is arrested before judgment he is entitled to apply for compensation under this section though he has not been served with the writ of summons in the suit (u)

Counter claim for compensation in a summary suit —If a defendant who is arrested before judgment in a summary suit brought against him on a negotiable instrument under O 37 claims compensation for arrest under this section he is entitled on that ground to apply for leave to defend the suit under O 37 r 3 and if a prima facie case is made out leave to defend should be given (v)

Provincial Small Cause Courts —A Provincial Small Cause Court has no juris diction to make an order for the attachment before judgment of immovable property But it may order an attachment before judgment of movable property and if the attachment was obtained on insufficient grounds it may award compensation to the defendant under this section (w) See s 7 (b) (i) and O 38 r 13

Appeal —An appeal lies from an order under this section see sec 104 sub sec (1) cl (f)

S 491 of the Code of 1882 provided for compensation for wrongful arrest and attachment S 497 provided for compensation for wrongful injunction An order under s 497 was appealable under that Code (x) but orders under s 491 were held not to be appealable (y) The present section combines the provisions of ss 491 and 497 and s 104 gives a right of appeal from all orders under this section whether they are orders made on an application for compen ation for wrongful injunction or for wrongful arrest or attachment

PART VII

Appeals from Original Decrees

96 [S 540 Jud Act, 1873 s 49] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court

Appeal from original decree

(2) An appeal may lie from an original decree passed ex parte

(3) No appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties

Changes introduced by the section—Sub section (3) is new In other respects this section corresponds with s 540 of the Code of 1882 As to the effect of sub section (3) see notes below under the head Sub section (3) consent decrees not appealable

Compare Judicature Act 1873 s 49 which provides that no order made by the High Court or any judge thereof by the consent of parties shall be subject to any appeal except by leave of the Court or judge making such order

Letters Patent appeals—The right of appeal from a decree of a single Judge of a High Court to the High Court is governed not by this section but cl 15 of the Letters Patent The Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court that is to say from a single Judge of the High Court This right of appeal depends on the cl 15 of the Charter (b) But as regards procedure the Court and the rules there in contained especially the rules contained in O 41 apply to proceedings in a High Court under the Letters Patent save so far as the Code expressly provides to the contrary (c)

Right of appeal—It is not to be assumed that there is a right of appeal in every matter which comes under the consideration of a Court such right must be given by statute or by some authority equivalent to a statute (d) Unless a right of appeal is clearly given by statute it does not exist whereas a litigant has independently of any statute a right to institute any suit of a civil nature in some Court or another (e) No right of appeal can be given except by express words (f) Note in the present section the express words an appeal shall lie from every decree Rights of appeal again are substantive right They are not mere matters of procedure Hence an Act which takes away an existing right of appeal must not be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment (g)

Agreement not to appeal —An agreement whereby the parties agree not to appeal from a decree is binding upon the parties thereto if it is for a lawful consideration and is otherwise valid (h) But an agreement by the next friend of a minor not to appeal is not binding on the minor (i)

Decree —As to the distinction between a decree and an order see p 5 above All decrees are appealable unless the appeal is barred under this Code or any other law But all orders are not appealable The only orders appealable are those specified in 104

Where decree not drawn up —No appeal can be entertained from a decree unless the decree has been drawn up (j) See notes to 33 also notes to s 97 Where preliminary decree not drawn up

Appeal from ex parte decree —S 540 of the Code of 1882 as it originally stood did not contain any clause allowing appeal from ex parte decrees The clause allowing such appeals was added by s 4o of the Civil Procedure Code Amending Act 7 of 1888 Prior to that Act it was doubted in some cases whether an appeal lay from an ex parte decree As to the powers of an appellate Court in the matter of ex parte decree see notes to O 9 r 13 Whether remedies concurrent

Forum of appeal —The value of a suit that is the amount or value of the subject matter thereof determines the forum of suit that is the Court in which the suit is to be filed It also determines the forum of appeal that is the Court to which the appeal lies What then is the value of a suit for the purposes of appeal Now a plaintiff may in his plaint fix a sum definitively as the amount of his claim as in a suit for debt or he may fix it approximately or tentatively as in a suit for accounts or for mesne profits [O 7 r 2] Where the plaintiff fixes a sum definitively it is that sum which determines the forum of appeal and not the amount awarded by the decree and involved in the appeal Where the plaintiff fixes a sum approximately there is a difference of opinion as to the forum of appeal According to the Calcutta High Court it is the amount decreed by the first Court as the amount due to the plaintiff which determines the forum of appeal (k) According to the Bombay (l) and Allahabad (m) High Courts it is the amount determined by the first Court as the amount due to the plaintiff and accepted by the plaintiff by payment of additional court fee which determines the forum of appeal According to the Madras High Court it is the amount or value of the subject matter as fixed in the plaint though approximately which determines the Court to which the appeal lies and not the amount decreed It has accordingly been held by that Court that where in a suit for account filed in the Court of a District Munsif whose jurisdiction is limited to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 2,500 the plaintiff fixes his claim approximately at Rs 2 000 and the Munsif passes a decree for more than Rs 5 000 the appeal from the Munsif's decree lie not to the High Court but to the District Court (n) In a recent case (o) the Allahabad High Court has adopted the same rule as Madras Where a suit is dismissed by the first Court—in which case the mesne profits remain undetermined—the sum stated in the plaint determines the forum of appeal (p) A Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta has recently held that where a suit is properly brought in the Court of a Munsif for recovery of possession of land and mesne profits pendente lite are claimed or assessed at a sum beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif the Munsif has jurisdiction to fix such mesne profits and pass a decree for a sum beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction The value of such a suit for purposes of jurisdiction is the value of the immovable property plus mesne profits up to the date of the suit where such profits are claimed If a suit is rightly entertained as within the jurisdiction of the Munsif and a decree passed his power to grant the proper and adequate relief is not affected by any event which increases the value of the relief during the pendency of the suit The forum of appeal is determined by the value of the suit and not by the amount decreed (q) The undermentioned decisions (r) of the same High Court must be taken to have been overruled by the Full Bench case See notes to s 6 on p 19 above also notes to s 15 Over valuation and Under valuation on p 89 above

A decree is passed by Court M in respect of a cause of action which arose at Kadiri Appeals from decrees of Court M lie to Court C Subsequently Kadiri is transferred to the territorial jurisdiction of Court I from which appeals lie to Court B To which Court does the appeal from the decree lie to Court C or to Court B? The answer is to Court B because a transfer of territorial jurisdiction ipso facto effects a transfer of venue (s)

Who may appeal—An appeal under this section may be preferred by any of the following persons —

1 Any party to the suit adversely affected by the decree (t) or if such party is dead by his legal representative (u) [see s 146]

2 Any transferee of the interest of such party who so far as such interest is concerned is bound by the decree provided his name is entered on the record of the suit (v) [See notes to s 4 Representative on p 156 above]

3 An auction purchaser may appeal from an order in execution setting aside the sale on the ground of fraud [See notes to s 47 Appeal on p 166 above]

No person unless he is party to the suit is entitled to appeal under this section (w)

We have said above that any party to a suit adversely affected by a decree may prefer an appeal from the decree The question whether a party is adversely affected by a decree is a question of fact to be determined in each case according to its particular circumstances It is clear that if a plaintiff s claim is decreed in its entirety and all the issues are found in his favour the plaintiff cannot appeal from the decree In case the plaintiff s claim is decreed in its entirety but one of the issues is found against him can the plaintiff appeal from the adverse finding ? It has been held that he cannot (x) The reason is that the very fact that the decree is entirely in the plaintiff s favour notwithstanding a finding adverse to him on one of the issues shows that such finding was unnecessary to the determination of the plaintiff s suit It has been stated in the notes to s 11 pp 70 71 above that when a finding on an issue is not necessary to the determination of a suit such finding does not operate as res judicata and it is an elementary principle that an appeal is not admissible on any point that does not operate as res judicata Similarly if a suit is brought by A against B and the suit is dismissed in its entirety B cannot appeal from the decree And even if one of the issues is found against B B cannot appeal from the finding for such finding does not operate as res judicata for the reason stated above (y) See notes to s 11 Decision in the former suit must have been necessary to the determination of that suit on p 71 above and the cases there cited

It sometimes happens where there are two or more defendants that although a suit is dismissed as against one of them in other words the decree on the face of it is entirely in his favour the decree impliedly negatives the right claimed by such defendant as against the plaintiff and the other defendants In such a case it has been held that an appeal lies at the instance of such defendant on the ground that he is adversely affected by the decree X owes Rs 2 000 to A A assigns the debt first to B and then to C C sues A and B to recover the debt alleging that the assignment to B had become void through non fulfilment of the conditions upon which it was made A decree is passed against A but the suit is dismissed as against B Here the decree necessarily implies the finding that the assignment to B had become void inasmuch as but for such a finding the decree could not have been passed in favour of C who admittedly was the second assignee of the debt B may therefore appeal from the decree though as against him the suit was dismissed ( )

In some cases an appeal may be preferred by a defendant against his co defendants A sues two Hindu brothers B and C on a promissory note passed by B for money borrowed by him (B) as manager of the family alleging that B and C were joint and that the loan was obtained by B for family purposes B does not appear at the hearing C appears and admits that he and B are joint but denies that the loan was obtained for family purposes An issue is raised as to whether the debt contracted by B was for family purposes It is found by the Court that the loan was obtained by B for family purposes and a decree is passed against B and C Here C can appeal from the decree as between himself and B The rule is that when a Court deals with a case as raising not only a question between the plaintiff and the defendants but also as between the defendants one of the defendants can appeal from the decree as between himself and the other defendants (a) See notes to s 11 Res judicata between co defendants on p 00 above

Joinder of appellants —It is irregular for defendants with different defences to a suit and with different grounds for appeal to join in a single appeal (b)

Sub section (3) consent decrees not appealable —Sub section (3) is new It declares that no decree passed by consent of parties shall be appealable Under the Code of 1882 consent decrees were passed under s 375 Under the present Code (c) a consent decree may be passed under O 23 r 3 This rule corresponds with s 375 of the Code of 1882 except that certain words which occurred at the end of s 375 have now been omitted S 375 ran as follows —

If a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the whole or any part of the matter of the suit such agreement compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit and such decree shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement compromise or satisfaction

O 23 r 3 is a reproduction of s 375 with the omission of the words italicized above (d) This omission has been supplied by sub section (3) of the present section The said words barred an appeal from a consent decree only so far as such decree related to so much of the subject matter of the suit as was dealt with by the agreement compromise or satisfaction on which the decree was based. If a consent decree dealt with any matter extraneous to the suit that is matters that did not relate to the subject matter of the suit it was held that the decree though passed with the consent of parties was appealable and that it should be modified by omitting such terms as did not relate to the subject matter of the suit (e) As regards the terms so excluded it was held that they might be enforced in a separate suit as a contract (f) It would be so also under the present Code See in this connection the observations of the Judicial Committee in Hemanti Kumari Debi v Midnapur Zamindari Company (g)

Both under O 23 r 3 and the corresponding s 375 of the Code of 1882 the agreement or compromise in terms of which the Court is invited to pass a consent decree must be lawful It was accordingly observed by the High Court of Bombay in Cowasji v James Scott (h) a case under s 375 that notwithstanding the declared finality of the decree an appeal against it would be maintainable where the party against whom the decree was passed alleged that there had been in fact no lawful agreement come to in which case the condition precedent to the making of the decree would not be fulfilled These observations were mere obiter dicta but they were adopted by the High Court of Madras in Sridharan v Puramathan (i) where it was held that an appeal would lie from a consent decree if the agreement in terms of which the decree was passed was not lawful The present Code does not allow an appeal from a consent decree in any case But it is competent to either party to appeal from the order recording the compromise where the compromise is not a lawful compromise on the ground that the Court had no power under O 23 r 3 to record a compromise that was not lawful [O 43 r 1 cl (m)] See notes to O 23 r 3 Appeal

Plaintiffs sued upon an account stated The Court found that the account stated was a deliberate fabrication and fraud and the plaintiff had to fall back on items in the general account Each of these was found to be barred by limitation but defendants consented to a decree for such items as plaintiff could prove A decree was passed on this footing The Privy Council held that it was a consent decree and not appealable and that if it were not a consent decree plaintiffs claim would have to be dismissed (j)

Procedure for setting aside consent decrees—Sub section (3) in so far as it bars an appeal from consent decrees gives effect to the principle that a judgment by consent acts as an estoppel (k) A consent decree however may be set aside on any ground which would invalidate an agreement such as misrepresentation fraud or mistake (l) This cannot be done by an appeal and it must be done by a fresh suit brought

By consent of parties —To constitute consent there must be an agreement between the parties Mere acceptance by a party of an order offered by the Court does not amount to consent (p)

Appeal from final decree where no appeal from preliminary decree

97 [New] Where any party aggrieved by a preliminary decree passed after the commencement of this Code does not appeal from such decree, he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree

Preliminary decree —For definition of preliminary decree see s 2 (2) above

Appeal from preliminary decree —This section is new The object of the section is to estop parties aggrieved by a preliminary decree who do not appeal from such decree within the period of limitation from afterwards disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from a decree

This section enacts that where a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree does not appeal from such decree within the period of limitation he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree The reason of this enactment is that it is unreasonable that a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree should allow proceedings to be carried on to their final stage and large costs to be incurred and then object to the preliminary decree in an appeal from the final decree Recent Calcutta decisions under the Code of 1882 were quite the other way According to the e decisions a party aggrieved by an order in the nature of a preliminary decree was not bound to appeal from the order though the order was appealable as a decree he was at liberty to wait until the final decree was passed and then to dispute the correctness of the order in an appeal from the final decree though the period of limitation for an appeal from the order had then expired Thus it was held that when an order was passed in a suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts declaring the shares of the parties and referring the case to a commi sioner for taking accounts it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree though no appeal was preferred from the order and the period prescribed by the law of limitation for appealing from the order had then expired (q) In a sub equent case it was held by a Full Bench of that Court in Khadem Hossein v Emdad Ho ein (r) [Maclean C J and Rampini J dis enting] that where an order was pa ed in a suit for partition declaring the rights of the parties (s) it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctne s in an appeal from the final decree though no appeal was preferred from the order within the time allowed by law The contrary had been laid down in an earlier case decided by the ame High Court (t) but that

or satisfaction shall be recorded and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit and such decree shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement compromise or satisfaction

O 23 r 3 is a reproduction of s 375 with the omission of the words italicized above (l) This omission has been supplied by sub section (3) of the present section The said words barred an appeal from a consent decree only so far as such decree related to so much of the subject matter of the suit as was dealt with by the agreement compromise or satisfaction on which the decree was based. If a consent decree dealt with any matter extraneous to the suit that is matters that did not relate to the subject matter of the suit it was held that the decree though passed with the consent of parties was appealable and that it should be modified by omitting such terms as did not relate to the subject matter of the suit (e) As regards the terms so excluded it was held that they might be enforced in a separate suit as a contract (f) It would be so also under the present Code See in this connection the observations of the Judicial Committee in Hemanti Kumari Debi v Midnapur Zamindari Company (g)

Both under O 23 r 3 and the corresponding s. 375 of the Code of 1882 the agreement or compromise in terms of which the Court is invited to pass a consent decree must be lawful It was accordingly observed by the High Court of Bombay in Gocullas v James Scott (h) a case under s 375 that notwithstanding the declared finality of the decree an appeal against it would be maintainable where the party against whom the decree was passed alleged that there had been in fact no lawful agreement come to in which case the condition precedent to the making of the decree would not be fulfilled. These observations were mere obiter dicta but they were adopted by the High Court of Madras in Sridharan v Puramathan (i) where it was held that an appeal would lie from a consent decree if the agreement in terms of which the decree was passed was not lawful The present Code does not allow an appeal from a consent decree in any case But it is competent to either party to appeal from the order recording the compromise where the compromise is not a lawful compromise on the ground that the Court had no power under O 23 r 3 to record a compromise that was not lawful [O 43 r 1 cl (m)] See notes to O 23 r 3 Appeal

Plaintiffs sued upon an account stated The Court found that the account stated was a deliberate fabrication and fraud and the plaintiff had to fall back on items in the general account Each of these was found to be barred by limitation but defendants consented to a decree for such items as plaintiff could prove A decree was passed on this footing The Privy Council held that it was a consent decree and not appealable and that if it were not a consent decree plaintiffs claim would have to be dismissed (j)

Procedure for setting aside consent decrees—Sub section (3) in so far as it bars an appeal from consent decrees gives effect to the principle that a judgment by consent acts as an estoppel (k) A consent decree however may be set aside on any ground which would invalidate an agreement such as misrepresentation fraud or mistake (l) This cannot be done by an appeal and it must be done by a fresh suit brought

Appeal from preliminary decree —This section is new The object of the section is to estop parties aggrieved by a preliminary decree who do not appeal from such decree within the period of limitation from afterwards disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from a decree

This section enacts that where a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree does not appeal from such decree within the period of limitation he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree The reason of this enactment is that it is unreasonable that a party aggrieved by a preliminary decree should allow proceedings to be carried on to their final stage and large costs to be incurred, and then object to the preliminary decree in an appeal from the final decree Recent Calcutta decisions under the Code of 1882 were quite the other way According to these decisions a party aggrieved by an order in the nature of a preliminary decree was not bound to appeal from the order though the order was appealable as a decree he was at liberty to wait until the final decree was passed and then to dispute the correctness of the order in an appeal from the final decree though the period of limitation for an appeal from the order had then expired Thus it was held that when an order was passed in a suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts declaring the shares of the parties and referring the case to a commissioner for taking accounts it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree though no appeal was preferred from the order and the period prescribed by the law of limitation for appealing from the order had then expired (q) In a subsequent case it was held by a Full Bench of that Court in Khalem Hossein v Emdad Hossein (r) [Maclean C J and Rampini J dissenting] that where an order was passed in a suit for partition declaring the rights of the parties (s) it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree though no appeal was preferred from the order within the time allowed by law The contrary had been laid down in an earlier case decided by the same High Court (t) but that decision was dissented from by a majority of the Full Bench in Khadem Hossein's case Under this section omission to prefer an appeal from a preliminary decree precludes objections to it in an appeal from the final decree (u) It is to be noted that the present section applies only to preliminary decrees passed after the commencement of this Code For preliminary decree see O 20 below

Where preliminary decree not drawn up —A right of appeal under this section only arises when a preliminary decree is passed that is drawn up It is the duty of the Court and not of the parties to see that a decree is drawn up Unless a decree is drawn up there is no appeal The provisions of this section do not therefore apply unless the preliminary decree is drawn up (v) See notes to s 33 and notes to s 96 Where decree not drawn up on p 289 above

Two preliminary decrees —The Code it seems contemplates only one preliminary decree (w) The High Court of Calcutta however has held that there may in an exceptional case be more than one preliminary decree (x)

Final decree passed prior to or during pendency of appeal from preliminary decree —Under the Code of 1882 it was held that where after the passing of the final decree a party appealed from an order in the nature of a preliminary decree but did not also appeal from the final decree that circumstance was a bar to the hearing of the appeal from that order (y) Under the present Code the High Courts of Madras and Allahabad have held that the mere fact that no appeal has been preferred from the final decree is no ground for not hearing the appeal from the preliminary decree whether the latter appeal is filed before or after the final decree if the preliminary decree is set aside the final decree falls with it (z) On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where an appeal has been preferred only from the preliminary decree after the final decree has been passed the appeal is incompetent the reason given being that if the preliminary decree were reversed in appeal the final decree would remain unaffected as no appeal was preferred from it But it has been held by the same Court that the appellate Court may in a proper case allow the appellant to amend the memorandum of appeal so as to turn the appeal from the preliminary decree into one from both the preliminary and the final decree (a) If the final decree is passed after the filing of the appeal from the preliminary decree the appellant should file an appeal from the final decree (b) or at least inform the Court of the fact (c) In some cases where this course was not adopted it was held that the decree in appeal from the preliminary decree is infructuous because the final decree cannot be contingent on the result of the appeal (d) In a Calcutta case Mookerjee J enlarged the scope of the memorandum of appeal so as to convert it into an appeal against both the final and the preliminary decree (e)

98 [S 575] (1) Where an appeal is heard by a Bench of two or more Judges, the appeal shall be decided in accordance with the opinion of such Judges or of the majority (if any) of such Judges

Decision where appeal heard by two or more judges

(2) Where there is no such majority which concurs in a judgment varying or reversing the decree appealed from, such decree shall be confirmed

Provided that where the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges and the Judges composing the Bench differ in opinion on a point of law, they may state the point of law upon which they differ, and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges and such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal including those who first heard it

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to alter or otherwise affect any provision of the Letters Patent of any High Court

Difference between the old and new section—This section corresponds with s 575 of the Code of 1882 except that the proviso to sub section (2) of the present section differs in several material respects from the proviso to the second paragraph of s 575 The proviso to the second paragraph of s 575 ran as follows —

Provided that if the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges and the Judges composing the Bench differ in opinion on a point of law the appeal may be referred to one or more of the other Judges of the same Court and shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of all the Judges who have heard the appeal including those who first heard it

As to the points of distinction between the old and the new section see notes below The appeal shall then be heard upon that point only and By whom appeal to be heard upon point of law stated

Amendments—Sub sec (3) was added by the Repealing and Amending Act 18 of 1928

Difference of opinion as to part of decree—When a Bench of two Judges agree in reversing part of a decree but differ as to the rest the portion on which they agree will be reversed and the rest confirmed (f)

Differ in opinion on a point of law—No reference can be made under this section if the Judges differ on a question of fact The power to refer can only be exercised if there is a difference of opinion on a point of law (g)

(f) [illegible] (1[illegible]) 51 M [illegible] [illegible] 10[illegible] 1 3 [illegible] A M 1 0 [illegible] [illegible] Ogilr [illegible] (19[illegible]6) Lah 1 9 93 I C 344 ([illegible]6) A L 6

(g) Go[illegible] (1890) 17 C [illegible] 3

The appeal shall then be heard upon that point only —Under the old section it was the appeal that was referred to a third Judge when the Judges hearing the appeal differed in opinion on a point of law and it was held that on such reference the whole appeal was open for argument and not only the point of law on which the Judges had differed (h) Under the present section the Judges have to state the point of law upon which they differ and the appeal is to be heard upon that point only

By whom appeal to be heard upon point of law stated —Where a point of law on which the Judges hearing the appeal differ has been stated the appeal is to be heard upon that point by one or more of the other Judges of the Court This was in fact the practice followed in Bombay under the Code of 1882 (i) In Allahabad the appeal was heard by a Bench including the Judges who first heard it (j)

It is to be noted that while the appeal upon the point of law is under this section to be heard by a Judge or Judges other than those who first heard it the point is to be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal including those who first heard it

Where Judges differ on a point of law but do not state the point.— A obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge B appeals from the decree to the District Judge and the decree is confirmed in appeal B appeals to the High Court The appeal is heard by a bench of two Judges The Judges differ in opinion on a point of law but they do not state the point of law and deliver judgments as judgments of the Court without any reservation one Judge holding that the appeal should be allowed and the other that it should be dismissed In such a case the dissentient judgments operate as confirming the decree of the District Court under para 1 of sub sec (2) (k) The question still remains whether an appeal lies to the High Court under the Letters Patent from the confirming judgment of the two Judges Under the Letters Patent before they were amended in 1928 it was held that an appeal did lie from such judgment (l) Under the amended Letters Patent no appeal lies to the High Court (m) It may here be noted that where the Judges differ in opinion on a point of law but do not state the point of law and deliver judgments as judgments of the Court without any reservation they cannot afterwards state the point of law (n)

Appeal to High Court from award under Land Acquisition Act— This section applies to land acquisition appeals by virtue of the provisions of s 54 of the Land Acquisition Act 1894 (o)

Sub sec (3) Letters Patent appeal —This sub section is new It was added into the section by the Repealing and Amending Act 18 of 1928 It does no more than give effect to the decision before that Act namely that where an appeal is heard by a Bench of two Judges of a High Court and the Judges differ then if the appeal is a Letters Patent appeal the procedure is governed by cl. 36 of the Letters Patent (p) but if the appeal is one under the Code

Substitute the following for the last paragraph on p 296 and for foot notes (p) and (q) —

Sec 98 of Code and cl 36 of Letters Patent — Sub sec (3) is new It was inserted by the Repealing and Amending Act 18 of 1928 It provides that nothing in the section shall be deemed to alter or otherwise affect any provision of the Letters Patent of any High Court Before the Act of 1928 the trend of decisions was that where an appeal was heard by a Bench of two Judges of a Chartered High Court and the Judges differed then if the appeal was one from the Original Side of the High Court the procedure was governed by cl 36 of the Letters Patent (p) but if the appeal was from the decree of a Subordinate Judge the procedure was governed by the present section (q) At the same time it was held by the High Court of Allahabad (q1) that cl 27 of the Letters Patent of that High Court (corresponding to cl 36 of the Letters Patent of the High Courts of Calcutta Madras and Bombay) applied even to appeals from the decree of a Subordinate Judge All the cases were reviewed by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (q2) and it was held that the effect of sub sec (3) was that cl 36 applied not only to appeals from the original side of a Chartered High Court but also to appeals to the High Court from decrees of subordinate Courts The difference of procedure between cl 36 and sec 98 is (1) that while a reference on the point of difference is obligatory under cl 36 it is optional under sec 98 and (2) while a reference under cl 36 may be on fact and law it can be in law only under sec 98 See notes under cl 36

Suits Valuation Act 1887 section 11—Sec 11 of the Suits Valuation Act 1887 modifies the provisions of the present section in cases where an objection is taken in appeal that by reason of the over valuation or under valuation of a suit a Court which had no jurisdiction with respect to the suit exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto That section is as follows —

(1) Notwithstanding anything in section [99] of the Code of Civil Procedure an objection that by reason of the over valuation or under valuation of a suit or appeal a Court of first instance or lower appellate Court which had no jurisdiction with respect to the suit or appeal exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto shall not be entertained by an appellate Court unless—

(a) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were first framed and recorded or in the lower appellate Court in the memorandum of appeal to that Court and

(b) the appellate Court is satisfied for reasons to be recorded by it in writing that the suit or appeal was over valued or under valued and that the over valuation or under valuation thereof has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits

(2) If the objection was taken in the manner mentioned in clause (a) of sub section (1) but the appellate Court is not satisfied as to both the matters mentioned in clause (b) of that sub section and has before it the materials necessary for the determination of the other grounds of appeal to itself it shall dispose of the appeal as if there had been no defect of jurisdiction in the Court of first instance or lower appellate Court

(3) If the objection was taken in that manner and the appellate Court is satisfied as to both those matters and has not those materials before it it shall proceed to deal with the appeal under the rules applicable to the Court with respect to the hearing of appeal but if it remands the suit or appeal or frames and refers issues for trial, or requires additional evidence to be taken it shall direct its order to a Court competent to entertain the suit or appeal.

Appeals from Appellate Decrees

100 [S 584] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force an appeal shall lie to the High Court from every decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to a High Court, on any of the following grounds namely —

Second Appeal

(a) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law

(b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law ,

(c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits

(2) An appeal may lie under this section from an appellate decree passed ex parte

Changes introduction by the section—The word specified in the expression specified law or usage which occurred in cl (a) of s 584 of the repealed Code has been omitted see the undermentioned case (f)

Scope of the section—This section deals with second or special appeals A second appeal can lie to the High Court A Court of first appeal is competent to enter into questions of fact and decide whether the findings of facts by the lower Court are or are not erroneous But a Court of second appeal is not competent to entertain questions as to the soundness of a finding of fact by the Court below (g) A second appeal can only lie on one or other of the grounds specified in the present Section (h) A judge to whom a memorandum of second appeal is presented for admission is entitled to consider whether any of the grounds specified in this section exist and apply to the case and if they do not to reject the appeal summarily (i) The limitations to the power of the Court imposed by ss 100 and 101 in a second appeal ought to be attended to and an appellant ought not to be allowed to question the finding of the first appellate Court upon a matter of fact (j) Nothing can be clearer than the declaration in the Civil Procedure Code that no second appeal will lie except on the grounds specified in section [100] No Court in India or elsewhere has power to add to or enlarge those grounds (k)

No second appeal lies on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact—There is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be No doubt a second appeal does lie where there is a substantial error or defect in procedure [see cl (c)] but an erroneous finding of fact is a different thing from an error or defect in procedure Where there is no error or defect in procedure the finding of the first appellate Court upon a question of fact is final if that Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of the finding (l) The mere fact that the High Court would have upon the documents and evidence placed before the Court of first appeal come to a different conclusion is no ground for a second appeal it is precisely this revision of evidence which is excluded by the limited character of a second appeal This section was enacted for the express purpose of securing some measure of finality in cases where the balance of evidence verbal and documentary arose for decision (m) Hence the High Court is not entitled in second appeal to go behind the findings of fact of the lower appellate Court which do not result from the misconstruction of a document or the misapplication of law or procedure but upon the oral evidence in the case (n) Similarly there is no ground for a second appeal upon a question of fact unless it can be shown that the lower appellate Court misdirected itself in point of law in dealing with the question upon the evidence (o) In Ramratan Sukul v Mussamat Nandu (p) their Lordships of the Privy Council said It has now been conclusively settled that the third Court which was in this case the Court of the Judicial Commissioner cannot entertain an appeal upon any question as to the soundness of findings of fact by the second Court if there is evidence to be considered the decision of the second Court however unsatisfactory it might be if examined must stand final And in Nafar Chandra Pal v Shukur (q) their Lordships said Questions of law and of fact are sometimes difficult to disentangle The proper legal effect of a proved fact is necessarily a question of law so also is the question of admissibility of evidence and the question of whether any evidence has been offered on one side or the other but the question whether the fact has been proved when evidence for and against has been properly admitted is necessarily a pure question of fact It has accordingly been held that a finding on appeal that an estate previously to its partition under the Estates Partition Act 1897 had not been partitioned privately or at all is binding on the High Court in second appeal it being entirely a question of fact (r)

Decision being contrary to law —A second appeal will lie where the decision of the lower appellate Court is contrary to law The term law in cl (a) is not limited in its meaning to statute law it means general law (s)

When the question is one of a right construction of a document (t) or of a legal inference from a document (u) the question is one of law and a second appeal will lie Thus where in a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff s proprietary title to the land in suit the lower appellate Court found on a construction of the wajib ul arz and other documentary evidence relating to the land that the plaintiffs were proprietors their Lordship of the Privy Council held that the right construction of the documents was a question of law which the High Court was not precluded from considering in second appeal In the course of the judgment their Lordships said That finding (namely that the plaintiffs were proprietors of the lands) of the Subordinate Judge was the result of his having mis construed the wajib ul arz The right construction of documents is a question of law which Judges in second appeal are not by ss 584 and 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now ss 100 and 101) precluded from considering by any finding of the lower appellate Court based upon such documents The Subordinate Judge arrived at his finding by inference drawn upon an incorrect construction of the wajib ul arz and the Judges in second appeal consequently were not bound by his finding that the plaintiffs were the proprietors of the land (v) Similarly the question whether a writing which is ostensibly a deed of ab olute sale and an agreement by the purchaser to reconvey the property to the vendor constitute an out and out sale and an agreement for reconveyance or a mortgage by conditional sale is a question of construction of documents and the High Court is entitled to interfere in second appeal (w) In a recent Privy Council case where the question was whether the possession of properties by a Hindu widow was merely in lieu of maintenance and not adverse to the plaintiffs their Lordships held that the question was one of inference from documents and not one of fact and that they were therefore entitled to draw their conclusion notwithstanding the concurrent opinions of the Courts in India (x) But where the question is not one of construction of a document or of legal inference to be drawn from a document but is one as to the effect to be given to a document as evidence of a fact or facts in issue a second appeal is not admissible Thus where a suit involves a question of the fact of adoption and documents are produced as evidence of the fact of adoption the question whether the documents do or do not support the alleged adoption is a question of fact and no second appeal will lie (y) The law on the subject was thus stated by Mookerjee J in Mukand Deb v Gopi Nath (z) We hold accordingly that unless there is a question of the legal effect of a deed which may be treated as a document of title or embodies a contract or is the foundation of the suit a second appeal does not lie A second appeal is not admissible merely because some portion of the evidence is in writing of which the meaning has been mistaken by the lower appellate Court

Where the lower appellate Court arrives at a conclusion which is an inference based upon an erroneous view of the law the judgment is open to question in second appeal (a) A judgment is also open to question in second appeal where a defect in the judgment is due to an error as to the admissibility of evidence (b) or where secondary evidence is admitted in contravention of the provisions of ss 65 and 66 of the Indian Evidence Act (c) or where there is failure to invoke a presumption of fact under sec 114 of the Indian Evidence Act 1872 (d) The question of burden of proof is a question of law and the High Court is entitled to interfere in second appeal if the lower appellate Court has placed the burden on the wrong party (e) A second appeal will also lie where an unregistered document which requires registration is admitted in evidence (f)

Where the Court of first instance grants a mandatory injunction for the demolition of a building and the decree is reversed in appeal on an erroneous view of the law a second appeal will lie (g) Though a person may not have been duly appointed executor he may render himself liable as an executor if he intermeddles with the estate of the deceased misapplication of law on this point is a good ground for a second appeal (h) The question whether a stipulation in a contract is by way of penalty is a question of law which renders a second appeal competent (i)

Where an appeal which ought to have been preferred to the High Court is preferred to a District Court and the latter Court hears and decides the appeal the decision is contrary to law and a second appeal will lie from the decree of the District Court (j) The High Court of Madras has held that where a Court assumes jurisdiction which it would not have had if the facts necessary to determine the question of jurisdiction been rightly decided a second appeal lies from the findings of facts (k) S

A second appeal will lie where the question is one of proper inference in law from findings of facts —Though a second appeal does not lie from a finding of fact yet where a legal conclusion is drawn from the finding a second appeal will lie under cl (a) of the section on the ground that the legal conclusion was erroneous Thus the question whether possession is adverse or not is often one of simple fact but it may also be a conclusion of law or a mixed question of law and fact Where the question of adverse possession is one of simple fact no second appeal will lie but a second appeal will lie from a finding as to adverse possession when such finding is a mixed question of law and fact depending upon the proper legal conclusion to be drawn from the findings as to simple facts (l) Similarly the question whether a Hindu family is joint or separate is generally a question of fact but in certain circumstances it may be a mixed question of fact and law and open to reconsideration by the High Court in second appeal (m) Where the question in a suit was whether the defendant was bound by a mortgage executed by his mother and it was held that he was their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the finding was substantially one of law and that it was therefore open to question in second appeal In the course of their judgment their Lordships said The facts found (by the lower appellate Court) need not be questioned It is the soundness of the conclusions from them that is in question and this is a matter of law (n) As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in another case the proper legal effect of a proved fact is necessarily a question of law and the High Court is therefore entitled to interfere in second appeal (o) It has thus been held that the question whether a transfer was made with intent to defeat creditors within the meaning of 53 of the Transfer of Property Act (p) or whether the plaintiff has made out his title to the property in suit (q) or whether a railway company took as much care of the goods delivered to the company as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods within the meaning of ss 151 and 152 of the Contract Act (r) or whether a lumbardar was guilty of negligence or misconduct (s) or whether the plaintiff is entitled to the easement claimed by him (t) or whether property is ancestral or self acquired (u) or whether a decree was obtained by fraud (v) or whether a tenancy is permanent (w) is a question of law and a second appeal will lie to the High Court It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where from a certain set of facts a Court infers a lost grant the process is one of inference of fact and not of legal conclusion and that it is not a ground for a second appeal (x)

If the decree appealed from is based on a misconception of the canons which the Privy Council and the High Court have defined as to how a special custom should be proved the High Court may interfere in second appeal ( ) It has been laid down by the Judicial Committee that questions of the existence of an ancient custom are generally questions of mixed law and fact (a) The present section precludes the High Court from interfering in second appeal with the findings arrived at by the lower appellate Court on all actual facts from which the existence of the custom has been inferred But the inference as to the exi tence and the decision as to the validity of the custom are matters of law and these may therefore be revised by the High Court in second appeal (b) Similarly where the que tion is as to the existence of a custom and the lower appellate Court has acted upon illegal evidence or on evidence legally insufficient to establish the alleged custom (c) or has based its judgment on irrelevant matters (d) or has proceeded upon a wrong construction of a document (e) the error is one of law and the High Court is entitled to interfere in second appeal As to certificates under s 41 (3) of the Punjab Court Act VI of 1918 in cases of custom see the undermentioned cases (f)

Clause (c) substantial error or defect in procedure—

No evidence to go to a jury—Case not raised by parties—Misconception of evidence —Evidence misread or misunderstood—Overlooking material evidence—Irrelevant matters — A second appeal will lie where there is as an English lawyer would express it no evidence to go to the jury because that does not raise a que tion of fact such a arises upon the s ue itself but a question of law for the consideration of the judge (g) Thus where the lower appellate Court found that a deed of compromise was not for the benefit of a certain infant and there wa no evidence in the case upon which that Court could found t judgment it wa held by the Judicial Committee that the case was one of a substantial error or defect in the procedure of the first appellate Court and that it wa a ground for a second appeal to the High Court (h) Similarly where the lower appellate Court disposes of a suit upon a case not rai ed by the parties and to which the evidence has not been directed it is a substantial error or defect in procedure within the meaning of thi section and a second appeal lies to the High Court (i) A second appeal will also lie where the finding of the lower appellate Court is based on a mi conception of what the evidence is (j) or on evidence which has been misread or misunderstood (k) or the lower appellate Court has mi directed itself in point of law in dealing with the question upon the evidence (l) or has overlooked or ignored material documentary evidence (m) On the same principle a second appeal will lie where the finding of the lower appellate Court e g a finding on the existence of a usage is based on irrelevant matters (n) A econd appeal al o lies where the Lower Appellate Court decides a question of fact not upon the evidence before it but on the authority of a previous finding of a Court of superior jurisdiction upon similar facts in a case between different parties (o)

Where the Courts below have mi conceived the real question they had to try —The High Court has jurisdiction under this section to set aside the decree of the trial Judge in favour of the plaintiff affirmed on the facts by the first appellate Judge on the ground that the evidence taken showed that the true question of fact which had not been considered and as to which no issue had been framed should have been answered in favour of the defendant (p)

Other cases of error or defect in procedure —Omitting to decide a material issue (q) omitting to examine witne ses tendered (r) refusing to receive documentary evidence which ought to have been accepted ( ) allowing the plaintiff in the lower appellate Court to change the nature of his suit (t) deciding an appeal without waiting for the return of a commission directed to be issued by the first appellate Court (u) have all been held to be good ground for special appeal But disregard of an Amin s second report as to a boundary line does not constitute a substantial error or defect of procedure within the meaning of this section and is no ground for second appeal (v) The refusal by a lower appellate Court to exercise the discretion vested in it by O 41 r 27 with respect to the admission of additional evidence is a substantial error or defect in procedure and affords a ground of special appeal But where the Court has exerci ed its discretion in a sound and reasonable way and in the exercise of its discretion refused to admit additional evidence the case is not one of substantial error or defect in procedure (w) Admission by the lower appellate Court of additional evidence tendered by the respondent without the consent of the appellant and without recording the reasons for its admission as required by O 41 r 27 is a substantial error in procedure and is a good ground for second appeal (x) Proceeding with a suit without the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff being brought on the record is also a good ground for second appeal (y)

Refusal by Court of first appeal to extend time for filing appeal —Where an application is made to a Court of first appeal to admit an appeal from the original decree after the expiration of the period of limitation that Court has the power on sufficient cause being shown to admit the appeal [Limitation Act s 5] If the lower appellate Court refuses to admit the appeal holding in the exercise of its discretion that there was no sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed time there is no ground for a second appeal The principle is that where a Court has exercised its discretion in a sound and reasonable way the High Court has no power to interfere in second appeal But if the lower appellate Court does not exercise its discretion at all or exercises it capriciously and arbitrarily or without proper legal material to support its decision a second appeal will lie under cl (a) of the section (z)

Dismissal of appeal for default—Though a second appeal may lie from an appellate decree passed ex parte no second appeal lies from an order dismissing an appeal for default Such an order is not a decree (a) see O 41 r 11 (2) and s 2 cl (2) sub cl (b)

New case in second appeal—An appellant should not be allowed to set up a new case in second appeal (b) nor should he be allowed to raise a new issue not supported by the evidence on the record (c) See notes below

Pleas which may be taken for the first time in special appeal—An appellant will not be allowed to set up for the first time in second appeal a plea not taken by him in the lower Court But if the objection is one which goes to the very root of the case it may be taken for the first time in second appeal (d) Thus an objection to jurisdiction may be taken for the first time in special appeal if it is patent on the face of the record (e) except it is submitted in those cases which fall within s 21 above Similarly the plea of res judicata may be taken for the first time in second appeal provided it can be decided upon the record before the Court (f) So also the plea of want of notice in an ejectment suit (g) As to the plea of limitation see notes to O 41 r 2 Leave of Court Limitation which refer to first appeal apply also to second appeals (h)

The High Court will entertain in second appeal a point of law although it has not been raised in any of the lower Courts provided the point of law arises on the findings of the lower Court or on the issues as framed and on the evidence already recorded Thus where the lower appellate Court awarded to the plaintiff a third share of the property in suit on the ground that remoter gotraj sapindas inherited per stirpes and the defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share at all the defendant was allowed to contend at the hearing of the second appeal that the plaintiff was not entitled in any event to more than a sixth share as remoter gotraj sapindas inherited per capita and not per stirpes (i) But the High Court will not entertain a point of law raised for the first time in second appeal if the point cannot be decided without remanding the case for further evidence (j) Nor can a point of law be taken for the first time in second appeal if it sets up a new right differing in kind from that asserted throughout the trial and not merely in degree as in the above case Thus

101 [S 585] No second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in section 100

No second appeal in certain suits

102 [S 586] No second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, when the amount or value of the subject matter of the original suit does not exceed five hundred rupees

Suits of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes —Whether a suit is or is not of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes is to be determined in the light of the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1887 [see ss 15 16 and 27] If a suit is of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court and the value of the subject matter of the suit does not exceed Rs 500 no second appeal will lie though the suit has not been tried in a Small Cause Court or though the Small Cause Court returns the plaint under s 23 of the said Act to be presented to another Court on the ground that it involves a question of title and is not therefore cognizable by that Court The reason is that it is the nature of the suit and not the Court in which it is tried that determines the right of appeal (l) The words any suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes mean any suit relating to a subject matter over which a Court of Small Causes would have jurisdiction if the claim were within the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction (m) In determining whether a second appeal lies under this section the original character of the suit is to be regarded rather than the character it may subsequently assume by operation of the findings of the Court (n) Nor should regard be had to the mode of trial of the suit thus a suit which is of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes is none the less so because instead of being tried under the summary procedure it has been tried in the ordinary manner (o) In applying this section it makes no difference that the decree sought to be appealed from was passed by the lower appellate Court in review (p) A suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court was decreed by a first class Subordinate Judge in his Small Cause Court jurisdiction and it was transferred for execution against immovable property to his regular jurisdiction The order passed on an objection to attachment was appealable to the District Judge by virtue of the provisions of section 42 above as execution was in the regular jurisdiction but no second appeal lay as the suit was of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes (q)

Suit for mesne profits —Section 15 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act gives jurisdiction to Courts of Small Causes to take cognizance of all suits of a civil nature of which the value does not exceed Rs 500 except such suits as are specified in the second schedule of the Act That schedule consists of several articles of which article 31 is the most important for the purposes of the present section That article excludes from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts any other suit for an account including a suit for the profits of immovable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant This article contemplates cases in which the plaintiff claims an account of moneys which the defendant has received and to an account of which the plaintiff is entitled because the moneys received belonged to him It has been held by a majority of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that a suit for mesne profits does not fall under this article in other words it is cognizable by a Small Cause Court Such a suit is not a suit for the profits of immovable properties belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant A suit for mesne profits is a suit for damages in which the defendant would be liable even if no profits have been actually received by him during the period of dispossession For in s 2 sub s (12) of the Code mesne profits are defined as profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom (r) On the other hand it has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (s) that a suit for mesne profits does come within art 31 of the said Act and is therefore not cognizable by a Small Cause Court Recent Bombay decisions are difficult to reconcile but the general effect of them is that a suit for mesne profits is a suit for the profits of immovable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant within the meaning of art 31 (t) but that it does not come within the said article if the amount claimed is an ascertained sum so that no account has to be taken (u)

Suit for rent —The High Courts of Madras and Rangoon have held that a suit for rent is a suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes (v) The High Court of Calcutta has held that it is not (w)

Suit for title —A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for title relating to immovable property A suit however which is otherwise cognizable by a Small Cause Court does not cease to be so because it incidentally involves a question of title (x)

Suit for a declaration —A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for a declaratory decree The mere fact however that there is a prayer for a declaration will not prevent a suit from being of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court if the other reliefs claimed in the suit could be obtained without asking for a declaration (y)

Execution —The expression suit in this section includes execution proceedings (z) from which it follows that if a suit is of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court no second appeal will lie from an order made in execution of the decree passed in the suit unless the value of the suit exceeds Rs 500 It is immaterial that the order in execution is made by a Court other than a Court of Small Causes or a Court vested with the powers of a Small Cause Court as where the property attached in execution of the decree is immovable property and the order in execution is made by a First Class Subordinate Judge in his ordinary jurisdiction The test is what was the nature of the suit

n which the decree ought to be executed was passed and not the nature of the proceedings in execution (a) It is also immaterial that the amount sought to be recovered in execution exceeds R 500 The test is not the amount claimed in execution proceedings but the amount of the subject matter of the suit (b) An order of remand made by an appellate Court in an appeal from an order of the Court executing a decree in a suit of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court is also not appealable (c)

Where the plaintiff decree holder applied under O 21 r 71 to recover Rs 660 being the deficiency of price from a defaulting purchaser and both the lower Courts disallowed the plaintiff s claim it was held that no second appeal lay to the High Court the reason given being that but for the provisions of r 71 a suit would have to be filed for that amount in which case it would have been a Small Cause Court suit and the application therefore must be treated as one made in execution of a Small Cause Court decree (d)

103 [New] In any second appeal, the High Court may if the evidence on the record is sufficient, determine any issue of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal which has not been determined by the lower appellate Court or which has been wrongly determined by such Court by reason of any illegality omission, error or defect such as is referred to in sub section (1) of section 100

Power of High Court to determine issues of fact

Changes in the section—The last part of the section beginning with the words which has not been determined was substituted by Act 6 of 1926 for the words but not determined by the lower appellate Court which occurred after the word of the appeal

Scope of the section—This section is new It was amended by Act 6 of 1926 as stated above The section as it now stands empowers the High Court in second appeal to determine issues of fact (1) where such issues have not been determined by the lower appellate Court or (2) where they have been wrongly determined by that Court provided the evidence on the record is sufficient to enable the High Court to determine such issues. If the evidence on the record is not sufficient the proper course is to refer the issues for trial under O 41 r 25

In the absence of any such provision in the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to the power of the High Court to determine in second appeal issues of fact which had not been determined by the lower appellate Court On the one hand it was held that where the evidence on the record was sufficient to enable the High Court to deliver judgment the High Court had the power at the hearing of a second appeal itself to fix and determine issues of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal but not determined by the lower appellate Court as a remand in such a case would merely cause delay and increase costs (e) On the other hand it was held that even if the evidence on the record was sufficient the High Court had no such power and the only course open to it was to remand the issues for a finding the lower appellate Court the ground of the decisions being that the High Court had no power in second appeal to determine any issue of fact (f) The pre ent section gives effect to the former view It has been held under this section that where the High Court has framed issues and referred the same for trial to the lower Court under O 41 r 25 and the findings of the lower Court on those issues are incomplete the High Court has power under this section to determine tho e issues if there are materials on which the High Court can come to a conclusion (g)

Under the section as it stood before it was amended by Act 6 of 1920 it was held that where a question of fact had been determined by the lower appellate Court but the decision could not be supported because it was based in part on evidence improperly admitted the High Court could not lool at the evidence to decide whether the remaining evidence after exclusion of evidence erroneou ly admitted was sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below and the proper course it was held was to remand the case to the lower Court (h) This resulted in unnecessary remands and the section has now been amended to enable the High Court itself in second appeal to come to the necessary finding of fact in all cases where the finding of the lower appellate Court is vitiated by an error or illegality such as is described in s 100 (1) Since the amendment the High Court may itself determine the necessary issues of fact without remanding the case to the lower Court in cases such as th above (i)

Appealable orders —This section and O 43 r 1 contain a full list of appealabl order The words save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code o by any law for the time being in force are new See notes below under the head Letters Patent appeal

Clause (f)—See Schedule II paragraph (21) and notes thereto It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that this clause does not apply to proceedings under cl (2) of s 11 of the Arbitration Act 1899 and that no appeal therefore lies under this clause from an order refusing to set aside an award made and filed under that Act but the High Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under cl 15 of the Letters Patent (j) In Calcutta the practice is for the Registrar to file the award The party dissatisfied with the award may then apply to have it set aside In Allahabad the practice is to apply to the Court for an order to file the award Hence it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that if the District Judge refuses to file the award an appeal lies to the High Court under cl (f) from the order refusing to file the award (k)

Clause (ff)— This clause was inserted in the section by Act 9 of 1922 See the proviso to sub sec (1)

Sub section (2)—Thus if an appeal is preferred under O 43 r 1 (a) from an order under O 7 r 10 returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court and an order is made in appeal remanding the case under O 41 r 23 no appeal lies from such order (m) This sub section however does not take away the right of appeal conferred by cl 15 of the Letters Patent (n) The High Court of Allahabad is the only Court that has held that it does (o) See notes below Letters Patent Appeal See also notes to O 41 r 23 Appeal

Section 154—There are some orders which were appealable under sec 588 of the repealed Code which are not appealable under this section As to these it is provided by s 154 that where the right to appeal has already accrued to a party before the commencement of this Code such right shall not be affected by anything contained in this Code

Letters Patent appeal—Clause 15 of the Letters Patent provides that an appeal lies from every judgment of a single Judge of the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction to other Judges of the Court Now an order refusing to set aside an award is a judgment within the meaning of the said clause (p) It is clear that if such an order is made by a Munsif s Court or by the Court of a Subordinate Judge or by the District Court no appeal will lie from it for it is not an order specified in the present section It is equally clear that if such an order is made by a Judge of the High Court an appeal will lie from it under the Letters Patent for the present section expressly saves the right of appeal given by any law for the time being in force Upon this point there was a conflict of decisions under the Code of 1882 The conflict arose from the provision contained in s 588 of that Code that an appeal lay from orders specified in that section and from no other orders [see sub sec (2) of the present section] The question accordingly arose whether s 588 by declaring that no appeal lie from any order other than those specified in that section took away the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent It was held by the High Courts of Calcutta Madras and Bombay following a decision of the Privy Council (q) that s 588 did not take away the right of appeal given by cl 15 of the Letters Patent (r) and that an appeal therefore lay from an order of a single Judge of the High Court refusing to set aside an award to the other Judges of the Court On the other hand it was held by the Allahabad High Court on a different reading of the Privy Council case referred to above that s 588 took away the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent (s) and that no appeal therefore lay from an order refusing to set aside an award though the order might be made by a Judge of the High Court It is submitted that the words save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force include the Letters Patent and that they were added into the present section to give effect to the Calcutta Madras and Bombay decisions This is the view taken by the High Court of Lahore (t) The High Court of Allahabad however has adhered to its previous view in cases under the present Code (u)

Privy Council appeal—The provision in sub sec (2) deals with internal appeals within the limits of British India It does not take away the general right of appealing to the Privy Council given by s 109 A applies to the District Judge of East Berar under

Sch II para 20 to file an award in Court B opposes the application The District Judge makes an order refusing to file the award A appeals from the order [see cl (f)] to the Judicial Commissioner The Judicial Commissioner makes an order filing the award B appeals to the King in Council from the order of the Judicial Commissioner Does the appeal lie to the King in Council? Yes for though no second appeal lies to the High Court by reason of the provision in sub sec (2) an appeal does lie to the King in Council under s 109 of the Code (v) Similarly though no second appeal lies from an order passed on appeal from the order specified in O 43 cl (j) an appeal lies to the King in Council under s 109 of the Code (w)

105 [S 591] (1) Save as otherwise expressly provided, no appeal shall lie from any order made by a Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction, but where a decree is appealed from, any error, defect or irregularity in any order, affecting the decision of the case may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal

Other orders

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub section (1) where any party aggrieved by an order of remand made after the commencement of this Code from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he shall thereafter be precluded from disputing its correctness

Changes introduced by the section —This section corresponds with s 591 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

1 Sub section (2) is new See notes below Sub section (2) appeal from order of remand

2 S 591 contained the word in any such order after the word irregularity The word such has been omitted as the expression such order gave rise to the contention in some cases before the Privy Council that s 591 applied to non appealable order only a contention that was overruled by the Privy Council (x)

Scope of the section —An interlocutory order made in a suit is either appealable (s 104) or not appealable This section like the corresponding s 591 applies to any order that is to appealable as well as non appealable orders Where an interlocutory order is appealable the party against whom the order is made is not bound to prefer an appeal against it but he may make the irregularity in the order a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit in which the order was made In other words s 10 allows an appealable order which has not been appealed from to be made the subject of appeal in an appeal from the decree There is no law prevailing in India which render it imperative upon a party to appeal from every interlocutory order by which he may conceive himself aggrieved under the penalty if he does not do so of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the appellate Court Nothing would be more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule which would impose upon a party the necessity of appealing whereby on the one hand he might be harassed with endless expense and delay and on the other inflict upon his opponent similar calamities It was so observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moheshur Singh v The Bengal Government (y) and in subsequent cases (z) and it is this principle that underlies the present section The present section makes it quite clear that an order appealable under s 104 may be questioned under s 105 in an appeal from the decree in the suit al though no appeal from the order has been preferred under s 104 (a) And even where the interlocutory order is one from which no appeal lies an error defect or irregularity in that order may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit in which the order was made (b)

Affecting the decision of the case —It has been held by almost all the High Courts that the words affecting the decision of the case mean affecting the decision of the case on its merits It has accordingly been held that an order cannot be attacked in appeal from a final decree unless the error defect or irregularity in the order is one affecting the decision of the case on the merits (c) It has thus been held by the High Courts of Allahabad Calcutta and Lahore that an order under O 9 r 13 setting aside an ex parte decree is not an order that affects the merits of the case such an order merely ensures a hearing upon the merits hence the order cannot be attacked in an appeal from the decree in the suit (d) But the High Court of Madras has held that such an order may be attacked in appeal from the final decree (e) In the Madras case how ever the ex parte decree was set aside as to one of two defendants who had not applied to et it aside and it was held that the order setting aside the ex parte decree as against that defendant may be attacked in an appeal from the final decree This decision was approved by the same High Court in a later case where also the facts were peculiar The point of the decision in the latter case seems to be that an order under O 9 r 13 may be challenged in an appeal from the final decree in the particular circumstances of a case (f) The Rangoon High Court refu es to read the words on its merits into this section and allows an order setting aside an ex parte decree to be impugned in final appeal (g)

An order remanding an appeal from an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court is not an order affecting the decision of the case and cannot be challenged in second appeal (h)

An order under O 41 r 19 re admitting an appeal which has been dismissed for default is not one which affects the decision of the case on the merits and it cannot therefore be attacked in an appeal from the final decree (i)

It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay Madras Allahabad and Calcutta that an order setting aside an award and directing the case to be tried by the Court may be attacked in appeal from the final decree (j) the reason given in the Allahabad case being that such an order affects the decision of the case on the merits (k) The High Court of Lahore has taken a different view (l) but the attention of the Court was not drawn to the decisions of the other High Courts

An order setting aside an abatement under O 22 r 9 does not affect the decision of the case on the merits Rather it re opens the hearing of the case on the merits and it cannot therefore be challenged in appeal from the final decree (m) But there is a difference of opinion whether an order setting aside an abatement may be so attacked if it is made simultaneously with the final decree in the suit It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that it may be so attacked if passed simultaneously with the final decree (n) On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an order setting aside an abatement cannot be challenged in an appeal from the final decree whether it is passed before or simultaneously with the final decree (o)

An order refusing leave under 0 (b) cannot be attacked in an appeal from an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court (p)

Error defect or irregularity —The error defect or irregularity referred to in this section must be an error defect or irregularity in law or procedure and not in matters of fact (q)

"Where a decree is appealed from —This section contemplates two things namely (1) a regular appeal from a decree and (2) the insertion in that appeal of a ground of objection relating to an interlocutory order The High Court of Allahabad has held that no appeal will lie where the appeal is ostensibly against the decree passed in the suit but the grounds of appeal are solely directed against an interlocutory order made in the suit (r) On the other hand the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras have held that an appeal will lie though the only reason for the appeal is an erroneous decision in regard to an interlocutory order (s)

It should be noted that in order to take advantage of the provisions of this section the ground of objection must be set out in the memorandum of appeal (t)

Sub section (2) appeal from order of remand —An order under O 41 r 23 remanding a case is appealable where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court [O 43 r 1 cl (u)] Such an order was also appealable under the Code of 1882 [see s 588 cl (28)] Under s 591 of the Code of 1882 it was held that a party aggrieved by an order of remand could object to its validity in an appeal against the final decree though he might have appealed against the order under s 588 and had not done so (u) Sub section (2) has been added to preclude an appellant from taking on an appeal from the final decree any objection that might have been urged by way of appeal from an order of remand (v)

(b) from any decree or final order passed by a High Court in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction, and

(c) from any decree or order, when the case, as hereinafter provided, is certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council

Ss 109 and 110 are to be read together See also cl 39 of the Letters Patent For rules of procedure in appeals to the King in Council see O 45 below

Difference between the old and the new section —This section corresponds with s 595 of the Code of 1882 except that in cls (a) and (b) the words decree or final order have been substituted for the words final decree and in cl (c) the words or order have been added after the word decree This however does not introduce any change in the law The Code of 1882 contained section 594 which ran thus In this chapter (that is chapter XLV) unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context the expression decree includes also judgment and order Chapter XLV of the Code of 1882 relating to appeals to His Majesty in Council has been split into two parts in this Code ss 595 596 597 and 616 being retained in the body of the Code [now ss 109 112] and the remaining sections being relegated to O 45 S 594 has been reproduced with slight alterations in O 45 r 1 But it is not reproduced in this part of the Code as four only out of the twenty three sections of that chapter are retained in the body of the Code What has been done instead is that the words decree or final order have been substituted where the words final decree occurred in the four old sections and the words decree or order have been substituted where the word decree occurred in those sections

Right of appeal to the Privy Council —The right of appeal from the High Courts to the Privy Council now rests on cl 39 of the Letters Patent and this is elaborated in ss 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure Therefore though there is no express provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 for appeal to the Privy Council from orders of the High Court made under that Act an appeal to the Privy Council is competent if the case comes under ss 109 and 110 of the Code ( ) Similarly a decree of a High Court in a testamentary matter is appealable to His Majesty in Council although sec 299 of the Indian Succession Act 1925 provides only for an appeal to the High Court (a) Thus an appeal lies from a judgment of the High Court on the appellate side granting probate of a will (b) But there is no right of appeal if sections 109 and 110 are not applicable e g from a decree of a High Court under section 91 (3) of the Rangoon City Municipal Act (c)

Decree —For definition of decree see s 2 (2) above An act of State is not a decree Hence no appeal lies to the King in Council from an order of the Viceroy and Governor General of India in Council deposing the Maharajah of a Native State in India such an order being an act of State (d)

Preliminary Decree —An appeal lies to the King in Council from a preliminary decree e g a decree declaring the liability of a party and directing accounts to be taken (e)

Final order —A final order within the meaning of clauses (a) and (b) of the section is an order which finally disposes of the rights of the parties (f) An order comprising the decision of a High Court upon a cardinal issu in a suit that issue being one that goes to the foundation of the suit and one that can never while the decision stands be questioned again in the uit is final within the meaning of this section notwithstanding that there may be subordinate inquiries to make (g) The expression final is used in contradiction to interlocutory (h) To determine whether an order is final or not it is necessary in each case to ascertain the nature of the proceedings (i)

In Rahimbhoy v Turner (j) which is the leading case on the subject their Lordships of the Privy Council held that where an order directing the taking of accounts which the defendant contends ought not to be taken at all decides in effect that if the result should be found to be again t the defendant he is liable to pay the amount the order is final within the meaning of this section In the course of the judgment their Lordships said

Now that question of liability was the sole question in dispute at the hearing of the cau e and it is the cardinal point in the suit The arithmetical result is only a con equence of the liability The real que tion in issue was the liability and that has been determined by this decree against the defendant in such a way that in this suit it is final The Court can never go back upon this decree so as to say that though the result of the account may be against the defendant still the defendant is not liable to pay anything That is finally determined against him and therefore in their Lord hips view the decree is a final one within the meaning of section 595 of the Code In a Calcutta ca e it was held that an order refusing to appoint a receiver in a suit is not a final order and no appeal lies from it to the Privy Council (k) In a recent Calcutta case however where the High Court had discharged an order made by the District Court appointing a receiver the High Court granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council The Privy Council affirmed the order of the High Court but observed that as a general rule and in the absence of special circumstances or some unusual occasion for it exercise the power of making interlocutory orders was one which was not a suitable subject for review by the Judicial Committee (l) An order made in revision under s 115 of the Code granting (m) or refusing (n) leave to sue in forma pauperis is not a final order An order of the High Court directing the lower Court to proceed with the execution of a decree which the lower Court has refused to execute on the ground that it had no jurisdiction is not a final order (o) An order refusing an application to be brought on the record as the legal representative of a deceased party to a pending appeal is not a final but an interlocutory order (p) But where after a preliminary decree had been passed in a suit for partition declaring that the plaintiff was entitled to a one fourth share in the joint properties the lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prosecute the suit and the High Court on revision reversed the order it was held that the order of the High Court was a final order as the effect of the order was to restore the preliminary decree whereby the plaintiff was declared to be entitled to a one fourth share and the order was to that extent a decision upon a cardinal point in the case (q)

An order made on appeal setting aside or confirming a sale under O 21 rr 90 and 92 is appealable to His Majesty in Council Such an order is clearly one which deals finally with the rights of parties It is true that no second appeal lies from such an order having regard to the provisions of s 104 (2) read with O 43 r 1 (j) But s 104 (2) cannot restrict the provision of the present section which allows an appeal to the King in Council from final orders (r) Similarly though no second appeal lies from an order passed in appeal from an order filing an award [see s 104 (1) (f)] an appeal lies to the King in Council from such an order under this section the order being a final one (s) But an order refusing a stay under s 19 of the Arbitration Act 9 of 1899 is not a final order as such an order does not finally dispose of the rights of the parties but leaves them to be determined by the Court in the ordinary way (t) For the same reason an order made by a High Court reversing an order passed by the lower Court under O 23 r 3 recording a compromise [see O 43 (1) (m)] and directing the lower Court to proceed with the suit in the ordinary course is not a final order (u)

An order of remand is not ordinarily capable of being the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council being ordinarily interlocutory and not final within the meaning of this section but it would be a final order and therefore appealable if it has the effect of deciding finally the cardinal point in the suit (v) Thus where the cardinal issue in a suit was as to the validity of a will and the lower Court held that there was no valid will and dismissed the suit but the High Court held on appeal that the will was valid and remanded the case under O 41 r 23 for the decision of subordinate points it was held that the order of the High Court was a final order as the order comprised a decision upon the cardinal issue in the suit and it was one that could never while the decision stood be questioned again in the same suit (w) Similarly where the cardinal point in a suit was whether notice under s 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 to annul certain encumbrances was properly served or not and the High Court reversing the decision of the lower Court held that it was properly served and remanded the case to be tried on the other issues it was held that the order of the High Court was a final order (x) Where the lower Court held that the matter in issue in a suit was res judicata and the High Court held that it was not and remanded the case for trial on the merits it was held by the Calcutta High Court on an application for leave to the Privy Council that the order was final (y) The contrary has been held by the High Court of Allahabad (z) But where the lower Court refused to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground that O 9 r 13 did not apply and the High Court remanded the case for an inquiry on the merits it was held that the order of the High Court was not a final order but a purely interlocutory order directing procedure (a) Where the lower Court refused to set aside an abatement on the ground that the application was barred by limitation and the High Court reversed the order and directed the lower Court to rehear the application for permission to implead the heirs it was held that there was no adjudication on the merits and that the order of the High Court was interlocutory and not final (b) It has also been held that where the lower Court dismisses a suit on the ground that the suit is barred under O 2 r 2 (c) or that the suit as framed is not maintainable (d) or that the plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain the suit (e) and the High Court reversing the decision of the lower Court remands the case for trial to that Court the order of the High Court is not final But there is a conflict of opinion whether where the lower Court dismisses a suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation and the High Court reversing the decision of the lower Court remands the case for trial to that Court the order of the High Court is final some cases holding that the order is interlocutory (f) and others that it is final (g)

In an Allahabad case an application was made by a company under sch II cl 17 to file an agreement to submit to arbitration The application was opposed (1) on the ground that the agreement not being under the seal of the company was invalid and (2) on the ground of misrepresentation and fraud The Court of first instance dismissed the application on the sole ground that the agreement not being under the seal of the company was invalid On appeal the High Court reversed the decree holding that the agreement did not require to be under the seal of the company and remanded the case for trial of the other issues i e issues as to fraud and misrepresentation From this order of remand the respondent applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council It was held by a Full Bench that the order was not a final order within the meaning of cl (a) of this section there being other important issues to dispose of namely the

An order of the High Court refusing to enrol a particular person as a legal practitioner under the Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879 is not one from which the High Court has juri diction to grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council Such an order is one pas ed in the exercise of the admini trative powers of the Court (j) An order refusing an application under s 45 of the Specific Relief Act 1 of 1877 is a final order (k)

Order passed on appeal —An order passed by a High Court rejecting an application to amend a decree is not an order passed on appeal within the meaning of cl (a) of thi section and is therefore not appealable to His Majesty in Council Moreover it is doubtful whether such an order is a final order (l) Similarly it has been held that an order made by a High Court refusing to admit an appeal presented after the expiration of the pre cribed period is not an order passed on appeal within the meaning of this section (m) An order passed in revision does not fall under clau e (b) (n)

Limitation —The application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council must be made within 90 days from the date of the decree sought to be appealed from [Limitation Act 1908 Sch I art 179]

Under the Limitation Act of 1877 it was held that in computing the aforesaid period the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree appealed from could not be excluded as s 12 of that Act did not apply to such applications (q) It was also held that the application could not be admitted after the expiration of the aforesaid period, though there was sufficient cause for not presenting the application within the prescribed period as s 5 of the Act did not apply to such applications (r) Both these sections have now been amended in the Limitation Act of 1908 and they have been made applicable to applications for leave to appeal The aforesaid decisions are therefore no longer law and it has now been expressly held that under s 12 of the Limitation Act of 1908 the t me requisite to obtain a copy of the decree appealed from is to be excluded (s)

Clause (c) Certificate as to fitness—Leave to appeal to the Privy Council may be granted (1) when a case fulfils the requirements of s 110 or (2) when it is otherwise a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council In either case a certificate has to be granted by the High Court in the first case a certificate to the effect that the case fulfils the requirements of s 110 and is therefore a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council and in the second case that for other reasons it is a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council [see O 45 rr 2 3] Clause (c) of the present section refers to the second class of cases In this class of cases it is not necessary that the order should be a final one Nor is it necessary that the value of the subject matter of the suit should be Rs 10 000 or upwards (v) The only condition necessary is that the case should be a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council Referring to this clause Lord Hobhouse said That is clearly intended to meet special cases—such for example as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money though it may be of great public or private importance (w) This was amplified in a later case before the Judicial Committee where it was said that clause (c) contemplated cases in which it is impossible to define in money value the exact character of the dispute there are questions as for example those relating to religious rites and ceremonies to caste and family rights or such matters as the reduction of the capital of companies as well as questions of wide public importance in which the subject matter in dispute cannot be reduced into actual terms of money" (x) Thus where a petition was made by a company for a certificate to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the financial and commercial position of the company might be seriously affected by the questions at issue and that those questions were of importance to Indian companies generally the High Court of Bombay granted the requisite certificate The order sought to be appealed from in that case was an order dismissing a petition presented by the company for a confirmation of a special resolution altering the memorandum of association of the company (y) Similarly when a case involved a substantial question of law and the point in dispute though not measurable by money was of considerable importance namely the extent of the control acquired by one who had built a fire temple for Parsis at Udwada the High Court of Bombay granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council (z) Similarly the question as to what is the legal position of a person who has collected the debts of a deceased person by virtue of his being a holder of a succession certificate under the Succession Certificate Act 1889 was held to be a substantial question of law of general public importance and leave to appeal was granted under cl (c) of this section (a) Leave to appeal was similarly granted where the question was whether a fraud practised by a mortgagor alone upon a Sub Registrar would vitiate registration and disentitle the innocent mortgagee from enforcing the mortgage (b) so also in a case involving the question whether it is necessary to register documents giving an option of repurchase (c) The mere existence of a substantial question of law is not sufficient to give the High Court jurisdiction to give leave to appeal under clause (c) of this section the question must also be of great public or private importance (d) As to questions of private importance referred to in the judgment of Lord Hobhouse it has been held that by private importance is meant private importance to both parties to the litigation and not only to one of them (e) The right of appeal to the Privy Council from a decision of the High Court upon a case stated under sec 66 of the Indian Income Tax Act 19 2 is given by sec 66A ( ) only in a case which the High Court certifies to be a fit one for such an appeal The High Court is justified in refusing a certificate in a case which in its view does not raise any question of such importance a would warrant a certificate under this clause It is not sufficient that the requirements of sec 110 of the Code are satisfied (f)

The High Court has under this clause to certify that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council To certify that a case is of that kind though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court is a judicial process which could not be performed without special exercise of that discretion evinced by the fitting certificate (g) The certificate must make plain upon its face that the discretion conferred upon the High Court was invoked and was exercised (h) It is the certificate and not the order for the certificate which the Judicial Committee has to consider and act upon and unless the certificate upon which the leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify that leave it cannot be held that the leave was properly given (i)

As to certificate of fitness in the case of decrees passed by the High Court in cross appeals from the same decree see the undermentioned case (j) See also notes to O 45 r 3

110 [S 596] In each of the cases mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of section 109, the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance must be ten thousand rupees or upwards and the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be the same sum or upwards,

Value of subject matter or the decree or final order must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value, and where the decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree or final order, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law

Construction of the section—In a recent case the Judicial Committee said It must always be kept in view that no real mischief can arise from not allowing a very wide construction of the section because such cases if worthy of being tried by a higher tribunal can always be dealt with under sub sec (c) of s 109 (k)

Date of valuation—As regards the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance the material date is the date of the institution of the suit But there is a difference of opinion whether if interest or mesne profits are claimed in a suit and awarded by the decree the interest or mesne profits are to be calculated up to the date of the institution of the suit or up to the date of the decree See notes below Amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance

As regards the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council the material date is the date of the decree from which the appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be made (l)

As regards the value of property referred to in the second paragraph of this section the material date is the date of the decree from which the appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be made (m)

Value of subject matter of suit

The amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance—In some cases the value of the subject matter in the suit in the Court of first instance may be over Rs 10 000 and the value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council may be less than Rs 10 000 In some cases again the value of the subject matter in the suit in the Court of first instance may be less than Rs. 10 000 and the value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council may be over Rs 10 000 What the section requires is that the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance must be over Rs. 10 000 or upwards and the value also of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs 10 000 or upwards The word and in the first paragraph of this section means and and not or (n)

Mesne profits and interest—The only class of cases under the head amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance that present any difficulty are those which include a claim for interest or for mesne profits Prior to 1874 appeals to the Privy Council were governed by the Order in Council of April 10 1838 By that Order it was prescribed that the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs 10 000 or upwards It was accordingly held by the Privy Council in cases that interest on money claims and mesne profits of immovable property subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit actually awarded by the decree appealed from may be added in calculating the value of the matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council but not interest or mesne profits accruing subsequent to the decree and if that amount was Rs 10 000 or upwards a party was entitled to appeal though the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was less than Rs 10 000 (o) It was also held that in no case can the costs of the suit be added to the principal in calculating the appealable value (p) The condition that the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance also should be Rs 10 000 or upwards was first prescribed by the Privy Council Appeals Act 6 of 1874 and it was subsequently introduced into s 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1877 The first authoritative decision on the meaning of the words amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance is that of the Judicial Committee in Moti Chand v Ganga Prasad (q) In that case the Court of first instance passed a decree for the plaintiff for principal and interest up to the date of the decree amounting to Rs 9 496 with further interest up to the date of realization From this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court and that Court reversed the decree and dismissed the suit with costs The plaintiff then applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council On behalf of the plaintiff it was contended that interest subsequent to the decree should be added to the sum of Rs 9 496 and that if that was done the value of the subject matter of the suit would exceed Rs 10 000 But this contention was overruled and the application was refused on the ground that the claim and decree in the original Court were for less than Rs 10 000 The plaintiff then applied to the King in Council for special leave to appeal but the application was refused In delivering the judgment of the Board Lord Davey said In the present case the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance construing that in the manner most favourable to the proposed appellant was at the outside the amount for which he recovered his decree which was below Rs 10 000 amounting in round numbers I think to about Rs 9 500 It is conceived that the words construing that in the manner most favourable to the proposed appellant mean even by including interest subsequent to the suit and up to the decree This decision is an authority for the proposition that interest subsequent to the decree cannot be included in calculating the amount of the subject matter of the suit (r) The High Court of Rangoon has held that interest from the date of the suit up to the date of the decree can be included in determining the amount of the subject matter of the suit (s)

As to suits for sale in the case of a mortgage there is a conflict of opinion whether interest subsequent to the decree of the Court of first instance can be included in calculating the amount of the subject matter of the suit It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that in calculating such amount the Court should include interest from the date of the decree [that is the preliminary decree] up to the expiry of the period of six months provided in O 34 r 4 (t) According to the Calcutta (u) and Patna (v) High Courts such interest should not be included in determining the appealable value

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in two cases that in a suit for recovery of possession of immovable property with mesne profits the value of the subject matter of the suit consists of the value of the property plus mesne profits up to the date of the suit plus mesne profits from the date of the suit until delivery of possession or until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree with interest (w) The decision in the first Calcutta case (x) proceeded on the authority of Mohideen v Pitchey (y) a case under the Ceylon Ordinance No I of 1889 which does not impose any condition as to the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance The decision in the later Calcutta case however was based on the terms of s 211 of the Code of 1882

now O 20 r 12 ( ) The Calcutta decisions were dissented from by the High Court of Madras in Subramania Iyyar v Sellammal (a) where it was held that in calculating the amount of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance mesne profits only up to the date of the institution of the suit can be added to the value of the property of which possession is claimed The correctness of the Calcutta decisions was also doubted by the Patna High Court in Maharajah Kesho Prasad v Shiva (b) but in later cases (c) the same High Court followed the Calcutta decisions having regard to the practice of that Court in matters of settled practice to follow the Calcutta High Court The Bombay High Court follows the Madras ruling (d)

Costs —Costs cannot be included in determining the amount of the subject matter of the suit (e)

The sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value—In Radha Krishna v Sundarasuamier (f) their Lordships of the Privy Council said The sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value The proceeding may in many cases such as a suit for an instalment of rent or under a contract raise the entire question of the contract relations between the parties and that question may settled one way or the other affect a much greater value and its determination may govern rights and liabilities of a value beyond the limit It has thus been held that where the subject matter in dispute relates to a recurring liability and is in respect of a property above the appealable value the case is within the first paragraph of this section Hence if the rent claimed in a suit is less than Rs 10 000 but the liability is of a recurring nature and the property is above that value the value of the subject matter must be deemed to be over Rs 10 000 (g) It cannot however be said where the suit is to enforce payment of an annuity of Rs 125 per annum that the value of the subject matter of the suit is Rs 10 000 or upwards for such an annuity cannot by any reasonable method of valuation be worth Rs 10 000 (h) Where the sole question was as to the destination of the income of the residue until the residuary attained twenty five and the aggregate amount of the income was less than Rs 10 000 it was held that the value of the subject matter (namely income) was less than R 10 000 though the value of the residue was over Rs 10 000 (i)

Value as laid in plaint—In suits relating to immovable property the value of the subject matter of the suit is the selling or market value and not the value as deduced from the amount of the stamp upon the plaint Hence if in a suit for possession of immovable property the value of the property as laid in the plaint is under R 10 000 for the purpose of Court fee it is open to the applicant to show when applying for a certificate for leave to appeal to the Privy Council that the market value of the property was Rs 10 000 or upwards (j) But a defendant who had previously adopted the value given in the plaint for the purpose of an appeal preferred by him to the High Court should not be allowed to contest that valuation on a petition by the plaintiff for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council on the principle that a party cannot both approbate and reprobate (k)

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where in a suit for accounts the plaintiff values his claim for less than Rs 5 000 and institutes his suit in a Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs 5 000 he cannot be heard to say that the amount of the subject matter is Rs 10 000 or upwards (l) In the course of the judgment Beaman J said The amount or value of the subject matter of a suit can in no case exceed the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court in which it is instituted It follows that the amount or value of the subject matter of a suit for the purposes of s 109 clause (a) and (b) and s 110 of the Civil Procedure Code if that suit is instituted in a Court the pecuniary limits of whose jurisdiction is Rs 5 000 can never be greater than Rs 5 000 It is different however where a suit is for an injunction and a declaration relating to immovable property for such a suit according to the Bombay decisions may be brought in the Court of a Second Class Subordinate Judge though the value of the property may exceed Rs 5 000 In such a case it has been held that the case does not fall under the first paragraph of this section but that it falls under the second paragraph and that the plaintiff is not precluded from showing that the decree involved some claim or question to property of the value of Rs 10 000 or upwards within the meaning of the second paragraph (m)

In a suit for a general account against a trustee which charges him also with specific items of malversation each item of malversation does not constitute a distinct subject matter (n)

Value of subject matter in dispute on appeal to Privy Council

The amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council —Not only the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance but the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs 10 000 or upwards The word and in the first paragraph of the section cannot be read as or (o) The words amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council mean the amount or value at the date of the High Court decree under appeal (p) A sues B to recover Rs 10 800 The trial Judge passes a decree for A for Rs 8 280 with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of suit till the date of realization B appeals from the decree to the High Court and A s suit is dismissed A appeals for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council If interest were to be added to the decretal amount Rs 8 280 the valuation of the proposed appeal to the Privy Council would be over Rs 10 000 Is A entitled to add the interest ? The Allahabad Court has held that he is not (q)

Abandonment of appeal in part after grant of certificate —A obtains a decree against B for Rs 11 000 B applies for leave to appeal from the decree to the Privy Council and a certificate is granted Afterwards in the printed case and at the hearing B withdraws part of his appeal reducing by so doing the amount in dispute to Rs 9 000 Does this render the appeal incompetent ? No if B had a bona fide intention when he applied for a certificate to appeal in respect of the whole amount of the decree (t)

Claim to property of value of Rs 10 000 or upwards

Or the decree or final order must involve directly or indirectly some claim or question to property of the value of Rs 10 000 or upwards —The decree or final order referred to in the second paragraph of the section is the decree or final order from which the appeal is to be preferred to the Privy Council The material date for determining the value of the property under this paragraph is the date of that decree or order (u)

Note that the expression used in the second paragraph of this section is property" while that used in the first paragraph is subject matter of the suit and subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council. It has been held by the High Court of Madras (v) that the second paragraph of this section applies only to cases which involve some claim or question to or respecting property additional to the actual subject matter in dispute in the appeal and to be taken into account therewith in making up the appealable value or it may possibly also apply to cases involving claims incapable of a money valuation such as claims to easements and the like but apart from this if nothing beyond the actual subject matter in dispute is involved the first paragraph of the section alone applies. This decision is at variance with the view expressed by Maclean C J at the end of his judgment in Dalgleish v Damodar (w) but that part of the judgment of the learned Chief Justice was an obiter dictum not supported by reasons. In a recent Patna case (x) Miller C J expressed his preference for the view taken by the Madras High Court The Madras view has also been adopted by the Rangoon High Court (y) In Udoychand v P L Gudar ( ) the plaintiff brought a suit to set aside an award in favour of the defendant for Rs 3 900 The trial Judge set aside the award, but the appellate Court reversed the decree and dismissed the suit The plaintiff applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council alleging that if the appeal succeeded he could proceed with a suit which had been stayed in which he had claimed Rs 81 000 as damages against the defendant for breach of the contract which had led to the reference to arbitration The High Court refused leave and the plaintiff applied for special leave to appeal from the decree of the High Court The Judicial Committee held that the plaintiff's claim upon the contract was too remote to be considered as being property indirectly involved within the meaning of this section and the petition was dismissed Their Lordships said Their Lordships are not inclined to attempt any precise definition of the word property The Civil Procedure Code has not done so and any definition might not be found in the future precisely to fit the circumstances which the kaleidoscope of actual experience may produce But they think that the present is not a case where the issue of this suit can be said directly or indirectly to involve other property Let the situation be considered If this appeal were allowed and were successful what would be the position ? Their Lordships think that this is not really consequential on the present decree and too remote to be entitled to the description of being property indirectly involved in the issue of this suit

Where the plaintiff a tenant in common obtained a decree against the defendant another tenant in common for a mandatory injunction directing the defendant to demolish buildings erected by the defendant on a plot of common land the buildings being worth more than Rs 10 000 the High Court granted leave to the defendant to appeal to the Privy Council though the subject matter of the suit was valued for purposes of court fees at Rs 1 500 (a) Similarly where the plaintiff obtained a decree for possession of a piece of land worth Rs 2 000 and the result of the decree was to oblige the defendant to remove buildings worth more than Rs 10 000 which the defendant had built on the land leave was granted to appeal to the Privy Council (b) Where the value of the subject matter of the suit was below Rs 10 000 but the effect of a deed of gift with regard to the construction of which there was a dispute would govern the ownership of property worth five lac a certificate of appeal was granted (c) Similarly where the value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council was below Rs 10 000 but the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council involved a decision as to the validity of an award which dealt with property worth over Rs 10 000 a certificate of appeal was granted (d)

A sues B for a declaration that he is entitled to a one third share in the property in suit and for a decree for partition and for delivery of his share to him The property exceeds Rs 10 000 in value but the share claimed by A is of a value less than Rs 10 000 A decree is passed for A as prayed B then applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council Does the decree involve a claim or question to property of a value exceeding Rs 10 000 ? Yes according to the Calcutta High Court (e) No according to the Bombay High Court unless there be other property outside the subject matter in dispute which can be affected by the decision (f) In one of the Bombay cases (g) Jenkins C J held that in order to determine the value prescribed by this section the decree has to be looked at as it affects the interests of the parties prejudiced by it and where the detriment to the party seeking relief is estimated at less than Rs 10 000 then the value of the matter in dispute in appeal is not of the prescribed value and the decree itself does not involve any claim or question to or respecting property of the prescribed value and the case does not fulfil the requirements of the section The Patna High Court has followed the Bombay decisions (h)

The High Court of Bombay has also held that in a suit by a partner for accounts and for recovery of his share it is the value of the plaintiff's share that must be looked to and not the value of the whole of the partnership assets (i) It appears however from a judgment of the same High Court in the undermentioned case (j) that if A sues B claiming the exclusive user of a well and compound valued at Rs 10 000 odd and the High Court holds that A and B are equally entitled to the user the decree must be deemed to involve property of the value of Rs 10 000 odd so as to entitle A to a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council

In a suit for an easement of light and air claimed by the owner of property A against the owner of property B it is the value of the easement and not the value of property A that determines the appealable value (k) In a recent Bombay case A sued B for possession under the Bombay Rent Act 2 of 1918 The rent of the portion occupied by B was Rs 275 per month The High Court on appeal decreed A's suit It was held that as the rent capitalized at 20 years purchase amounted to upwards of Rs 10 000 the decree involved indirectly a claim respecting property of the value of over Rs 10 000 and that B was entitled to leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (l) In a Lahore case however where A sued to eject B alleging that B was a tenant at will and B contended that he was a permanent tenant paying an annual rent of Rs 1 200 the Court held that the issue in the suit namely whether B was a permanent tenant or a tenant at will did not involve any question respecting property of the value of Rs 10 000 or upwards (m)

Where subject matter of suit not capable of valuation

Where the matter is under the appealable value or is not capable of valuation—In such a case a party desirous of appealing to the Privy Council may apply for a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council under s 109 cl (c) (n) See notes to s 109 Certificate as to fitness

Decree of affirmance

Where the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree—In this case it is not enough that the appeal involves some substantial question of law It is also necessary that the amount of the subject matter of the suit and of the subject matter in dispute on appeal must be Rs 10 000 or upwards or that the decree must involve some claim to property of like amount The existence of a question of law of itself does not give a right of appeal in the ordinary course of procedure under this section (o) This is clear from the word and with which the last paragraph of this section begins

Privy Council have held that the word decision in this clause means merely the decision of the suit and cannot like the word judgment be defined as meaning the statement of the grounds on which the Court proceeds to pass the decree It follows from this that in order to affirm the decision of the Court below it is sufficient if the appellate Court affirms the decree of the Court below it need not also affirm the grounds of fact on which the judgment was passed Thus where the decree of the appellate Court was that the appeal be dismissed but the reasons given were not the same as tho e of the lower Court in respect of some matters of fact it was held that the decision of the Court below was affirmed within the meaning of this section and that no certificate should be granted unless the appeal involved a sub tantial que tion of law (p) Nor is it nec ssary in order to affirm the d cision of the Court below that the finding of the appellate Court should coincide in terms with that of the Court below it is suffi ient if the findings of fact of the two Courts are in effect the ame (q) And it has been held that a decree of the High Court dismi sing an appeal for want of pro ecution the appellants not having supplied their coun el with materials upon which to argue the appeal when it was called for hearing is a decree affirming th d i ion of the Court below (r) Where the appellate Court agrees with the finding of the Court below upon the merits but varies the order as to costs (s) or awards simple interest from a c rtain date instead of compound interest (t) or allows a cro appeal modifying the decree to the extent of P 300 (u) it amount to an affirmation of the deci ion of the lower Court

In a Calcutta ca e (v) under the Land Acqui ition Act the applicant claimed Rs 7" 000 and odd as comp n ation but the Col ector awarded him Ps 28 287 The Judge on reference to him upheld the Collector s award The applicant then appealed to the High Court valuing the appeal at Ps 43 000 and odd being the diff rence between the two ums The High Court increa ed the amount of compensation by about Ps 7 000 It wa held that the decree of the High Court was an affi ming decree and leave to appeal to the Privy Council wa refu ed The High Court of Allahabad has held that where the decree appealed from varies the deci ion of the Court below to the prejudice of the applicant the decree is not a decree of affirmance (w) but it is a decree of affirmance if the variation is in favour of the applicant (x) In Annapurnabai v Ruprao (y) A alle ing that he wa adopted by the enior widow of one Shanker sued the junior widow and another for po e ion of property of over Rs 10 000 in value The junior widow denied the adoption and further she claimed to be entitled to P 3 000 per annum for her maintenance The fir t Court held that the plaintiff s adoption was proved but decreed to the widow Rs 800 per annum as maintenance The Appellate Court increa ed the maintenance to Ps 1 00 per annum but in all other respects affirmed the deci ion of the first Court The defendant applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council but the application wa rejected The defendants then applied to the Privy Council for special leave to appeal It was argued on behalf of the defendants that the value of the subject matter of the suit excee led Ps 10 000 as al o did the subject matter of the proposed appeal and that even if the maintenance alone was regarded as in di pute its value having regard to the widow s prospects of life exceeded Rs 10 000 This contention was upheld and special leave to appeal was granted but the appeal was limited to the que tion as to the maintenance allowance

In a suit by A against B a decree is passed in A s favour B appeals from the decree but the appeal is di missed by the lower appellate Court B then appeals to the High Court The appeal is heard by a single Judge of the High Court who reverses the d cree of the lower appellate Court From this judgment A appeals to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent with the result that the judgment of the single Judge is reversed by a Bench of two Judges B applies for leave to His Majesty in Council Here the decree appealed from is the decree passed by the Bench of two Judges of the High Court The Court immediately below the Court constituted by the two Judges is the lower appellate Court and not the Court constituted by the single Judge of the High Court This therefore is a case in which the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below and no leave to appeal can therefore be granted unless the appeal involves some substantial question of law The above result follows from the fact that the Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court that is to say from a single Judge of the High Court the right of appeal from the judgment of a single Judge of the High Court is conferred by cl 15 of the Letters Patent (z)

Judicial Committee and concurrent findings of facts

Rule of Judicial Committee in cases of concurrent findings of fact when the appeal before the committee fails on the question of law on which leave to appeal was granted —The Judicial Committee has undoubtedly power as a Court of review to review the concurrent findings of facts of the lower Court though the appeal before it may fail on the question of law on which leave to appeal was granted But as a general rule the Committee will not interfere with the e findings on the ground that where the question in one of fact it is a question of the weight and credibility of evidence upon which a Court of review can never be in quite as good a position to form an opinion as the Court of first instance (a) In Umrao Begum v Irshad Usain (b) Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of the Board said The question is not only a question of fact but it is one which embraces a great number of facts whose significance is best appreciated by those who are most familiar with Indian manners and customs Their Lordships would be specially unwilling in such a ca e to depart from the general rule which forbids a fresh examination of facts for the purpo e of disturbing concurrent findings by the lower Court The mere fact that the lower Courts do not agree on all the steps which lead to one and the same conclusion is no reason for disregarding the said rule (c) It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact that different Courts in arriving at the same re ult upon the same evidence have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations A difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence whatever view be taken of it must necessarily lead to one and the same inference (d) The circumstance that the trial Judge based his findings on oral evidence while the finding of the Appellate Court was ba ed on documents is not a ground for interference (e) Sometimes the nature of the question may be such (as where the question is whether a deed of gift was executed by a Mahomedan under apprehension of death) that the Judicial Committee will not interfere with concurrent findings of the lower Courts on that question even where the evidence is such a to justify either view (f) The rule [above referred to] however is not an absolute rule it presses upon the appellant with more or less weight according to the circumstances of the ca e and no doubt the fact that the Courts have differed on some important but subordinate questions is a matter to be taken into consideration in determining whether the evidence b fore the lower Courts should be reviewed in detail (g) Thus concurrent findings of facts have been allowed to be disputed where the question of fact appeared to be a good deal mixed up with law (h) They have al o been allowed to be disputed where the decisions though ultimately one of fact turned upon the admissibility or value of many subordinate facts and involved the con truction of documents and other questions of law (i) In a recent ca e their Lordships of the Privy Council said If it appears that underlying findings of fact there are questions of law on which the finding proceeded or that there is a case that the judges mi directed themselves then the rule as to concurrent findings not being the subject of appeal doe not apply to the exclusion of such grounds of law as are alluded to (j)

Where a trial Judge bases hi judgment upon a finding of fact and two of three Judges constituting the appellate Court agree with the finding and conclusion the third Judge arriving at the same result upon a different finding of fact there are concurrent finding to which the rule of practice of the Board referred to above applies (k)

The principle of concurrent findings of fact does not apply where the case is one of no evidence The reason is that a decision that there is no evidence to support a finding is a decision of law (l) Nor does it apply to a finding as to the existence of a custom since that is a matter of mixed law and fact (m) Nor does it apply where the question is one of inference from documents for that is a question of law (n) But if the documents are not documents of title or statements intended to have effect as claims compromi es or surrenders of legal rights but merely records of payments the construc tion of documents however ob cure is a question of fact and Privy Council will not interfere if the findings are con urrent (o)

Substantial que tion of law

The appeal must involve some substantial question of law—No appeal lies to the Privy Council from an appellate decree when there are concurrent findings of the appellate Court and of the Court below upon questions of fact unless the appeal involves some sub tantial question of law (p) To grant leave to appeal on the ground that there seems to be a point of law which however has not been argued here is not a compliance with the provisions of this section (q)

The question of law contemplated by this section must be one in respect of which there may be a difference of opinion (r) A question of law definitely settled by a ruling of the Privy Council is not such a question (s)

Involve—Suppose that there are concurrent findings of fact so that the Privy Council having regard to the rule stated above would decline to disturb them in appeal and that no substantial question of law could arise before the Privy Council unless those findings were set aside by the Privy Council Can the proposed appeal be said to involve a que tion of law so as to entitle a party to leave to appeal to the Privy Council? No

Rules of the Judicial Committee in appeals from India —

(1) A point not raised in the plaint before the District Judge or before the High Court cannot be raised before the Judicial Committee (g)

(2) The Judicial Committee will not disturb the findings of the Court below upon mere issues of fact unless it is clearly satisfied that there has been some miscarriage in the reception or in the appreciation of evidence (h)

(3) In appeal from second appeals the findings of fact by the first Court are binding on the Judicial Committee unless special leave to appeal from the decision of the first Court has been given (i)

(4) The Judicial Committee will not criticise with any strictness opinions as to the credibility of witnesses which is eminently a question for the Courts in India (j)

Bar of certain appeals

Amendment—The word and figure or the Government of India Act 1915 were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916

Appeal from a decree of a single Judge—Clauses 15 and 36 of the Letters Patent of the Presidency High Courts and the corresponding clauses of the Letters Patent of the other High Courts were amended by the Orders in Council dated the 3rd November 1927 The effect of these amendments was considered by Rankin C J in a recent Calcutta case (m) In the course of the judgment the learned Judge said — Section 111 of the Code however definitely prohibits an appeal to the Privy Council from a single Judge and to this extent overrides clause 39 of the Letters Patent The section is not a mere provision that nothing in the previous section shall be deemed to give a right of appeal from the decision of a single Judge The provisions of clause (a) of section 111 may have been motived originally by the existence of the right of Letters Patent appeal [cf Sabhapathi Chetti v Narayanasami Chetti] (n) or by the opinion that it is not reasonable in Indian cases that the Privy Council should be called upon to decide cases until a Bench has dealt with them But in any case the effect of section 111 upon

Reference, Review and Revision

113 [S 617] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, any Court may state a case and refer the same for the opinion of the High Court, and the High Court may make such order thereon as it thinks fit

Reference to High Court

Reference to High Court —See O 46 below

Benares State Court —The High Court of Allahabad has no power to entertain a reference on an application submitted to His Highness the Maharaja of Benares in a civil case from the Benares State Court (p)

114 [S 623] Subject as aforesaid, any person considering himself aggrieved—

Review

(a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed by this Code but from which no appeal has been preferred,

(b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is allowed by this Code, or

(c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order, and the Court may make such order thereon as it thinks fit

See notes to O 47 r 1 below As to rules of procedure see O 47 below

115 [S 622] The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such subordinate Court appears—

Revision.

(a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or

(b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or

(p) Sheobodh v Shira (19) 4 All 3 86 I C 23 ( ) A A 93

(c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit

Code of 1882 s 622 —This section corresponds with s 622 of the Code of 1882 There is no material alteration in the section

Limits of revisional jurisdiction —The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court under this section is called Revisional Jurisdiction The powers of the High Court under this section can only be invoked in cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court provided the case has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and such subordinate Court appears—

(1) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or

(2) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law or

(3) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity

The High Court has no power to interfere in revision under this section except in the three cases mentioned above Whether a particular order is expedient or not is not a ground on which the High Court can interfere under this section (q) Further in the exercise of revisional power it is not the province of the High Court to enter into the merits of the evidence it has only to see whether the requirements of the law have been duly and properly obeyed by the Court whose order is the subject of revision and whether the irregularity as to failure or exercise of jurisdiction is such as to justify interference with the order (r) If the High Court finds that the external conditions of jurisdiction of investigation and of command have been satisfied by the inferior Court it should not substitute its own appreciation of evidence or its own judgment thereon for the determination of the inferior Court in any matter committed by the Legislature to the discretion of the inferior Court (s)

High Courts powers of superintendence —A case may not fall under this section and yet it may fall under s 15 of the Charter Act 1861 now s 107 of the Government of India Act 1915

Certiorari —The provisions of this section are not exhaustive Cases may be imagined though rare ones which do not fall under this section For such cases it cannot be said that the powers of the High Courts which have inherited the ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts to issue writs of certiorari have been taken away by the provisions of this section (t)

Bombay Regulation 2 of 1827 —The High Court of Bombay has power independently of sec 115 of the Code to call for the proceedings of any subordinate civil Court and to issue orders thereon under Bombay Regulation 2 of 1827 Ch 1 s 5 (2) (u)

In which no appeal lies —The High Court cannot act under this section in any case in which an appeal lies to that Court The word appeal is not confined to first appeal it includes second appeal (v)

Memorandum of appeal may be treated as application for revision and vice versa—Where an appeal is preferred in a case in which no appeal lies the High Court may in a proper case treat the memorandum of appeal as an application for revision and deal with it on that footing (w) Similarly if an application for revision is made in a case in which an appeal lies the application may be converted into an appeal (x)

Interlocutory orders—To give the High Court jurisdiction to revise an interlocutory order it is necessary among other things that it must be a case decided within the meaning of this section and further that no appeal lies to the High Court from that order For the purposes of this section interlocutory orders fall into two classes namely—

A Those from which an appeal lies under s 104 (1) These are orders made by the Court of first instance

B Those from which no appeal lies These may be—

(a) orders made by the Court of first instance from which no appeal is allowed under s 104 (1) or

(b) orders passed in first appeal from which no second appeal lies having regard to the provisions of 104 (2)

As regard interlocutory orders falling under class A the High Court has no jurisdiction to revise them as they are appealable orders (y)

As regards interlocutory orders falling under class B there is a conflict of opinion whether they are subject to revision under this section The conflict turns mainly on the word case and the word may in the section Does the word case include an issue or part of a case? If it does not the passing of an interlocutory order is not deciding a case and it is not capable of revision It has been held by some Courts that the word case includes part of a case and by others that it does not

Assuming that the word case includes part of a case in other words includes interlocutory orders and assuming further that the other conditions laid down by the section are fulfilled there is no doubt that the High Court can interfere in revision with such orders There is also no doubt that though the High Court can revise such orders it is not bound to do so for the section says that the High Court may call for the record of any case it being discretionary with the Court to call for the record The matter being one of discretion the question has arisen (and on this point there is another divergence of opinion)—in what cases is it proper for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to revise interlocutory orders? To appreciate the different views on the subject it is necessary to bear in mind that though an interlocutory order may not be appealable under s 104 it may be challenged in the appeal from the final decree under s 105 provided the order is one affecting the decision of the case Again there are some interlocutory orders from which an injured party is given a right of suit to set aside th[illegible] stated in the note below Alternative remedy by way of suit or otherwise" It has been held in some cases that if a party aggrieved by an interlocutory order has the alternative remedy of challenging the order in an appeal from the final decree under s 105 [illegible]

has the alternative remedy by way of suit the High Court should not in the exercise of its di cretion interfere in revision with such order the power to interfere being exercis able only where there is no other remedy For instance no appeal lies from an order of a District Court made on appeal granting a temporary injunction [s 104 (2)] further any error in such order cannot be objected to in an appeal from the final decree as it cannot possibly affect the decision of the case within the meaning of s 105 nor does a suit lie to set aside such an order the High Court may therefore interfere in revision with the order ( ) Similarly where a Court asks a plaintiff to pay additional Court fee before his suit can be entertained the High Court may interfere in revision with the order as the order in effect amounts to a denial of jurisdiction (a) But why it has been asked and asked pertinently in a large majority of cases should the discretion of the High Court be fettered with such a hard and fast rule ? Why should the High Court refuse to interfere in every case in which the injured party has another remedy open to him ? Why should not the High Court revise an order even if there is another remedy open to the injured party if its non interference might lead to failure of justice or irreparable injury ? This last consideration has weighed with many judges and it has accordingly been held in some cases that the High Court may in a proper case interfere in revision even if there is another remedy open to the aggrieved party With these prefatory remarks the views of the different High Courts on the subject may now be considered

Prior to a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court to be presently noted it was held by that Court that interlocutory orders were not subject to revision first because an interlocutory order cannot be said to be a case within the meaning of this section and, secondly because a party aggrieved by such order though he cannot appeal from the order has another remedy open to him under s 105 namely to make the order a ground of appeal from the final decree in the suit (b) In Buddhu Lal v Mewa Ram (c) decided in 1921 a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the word case in this section does not include an issue or part of a case that it does not therefore include an interlocutory order and that the High Court therefore has no power to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders in any case According to this decision the word case means a suit where an application for revision is made in a suit and since the High Court under this section can only call for the record of any case which has been decided it has no power under this section to call for the record of a suit until the suit has been decided The same view of the section has been taken by a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in Lalchand v Behari Lal (d) decided in 1924

On the other hand it has been held by the Calcutta (e) Madras (f) Patna (g) and Rangoon (h) High Courts that the word case is wide enough to include an interlocutory order that the words record of any case include so much of the proceedings in any case as relate to an interlocutory order and that the High Court therefore has the power to interfere in revision with orders passed at any stage of a suit though there may be another remedy open to the injured party e g by making the order a ground of appeal from the final decree under s 105 subject however to this limitation that the High Court will not interfere unless its non interference might lead to failure of justice or irreparable injury Following this principle the High Court of Calcutta in one case set aside an order of the Subordinate Court framing additional issues which were unnecessary for the disposal of the suit when it appeared that the trial of those issues would entail an expenditure of time and money wholly out of proportion to the matter in dispute and cause irreparable injury to the plaintiff (i) Similarly where the lower Court refused the plaintiff s application for an amendment of the plaint the High Court of Madras set aside the order in revision and directed the plaint to be amended (j) In another case where the question was whether an election petition was maintainable at all, and the lower Court held that it was the Madras High Court set aside the order in revision and dismissed the petition. The Court observed that if the petition did not disclose any ground for an enquiry the lower Court would by holding the inquiry exercise a jurisdiction not vested in it by law and to hold it would simply lead to waste of time of the Court and of the parties (k) The High Court of Bombay also has held that the word case includes part of a case and that the High Court has the power to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders But there is a difference of opinion within that Court whether the High Court should in the exercise of its discretion interfere only in cases where there would otherwise be no remedy or whether it may interfere even if the injured party has another remedy open to him by an appeal from the final decree under s 105 or by way of suit On the one hand, it was laid down by a Full Bench in Shiva Nathaji v Joma (l) decided in 1883 that though the High Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision with interlocutory orders where the aggrieved party has another remedy open to him either by an appeal from the final decree under s 105 or by suit it will interfere if the appeal would manifestly be ineffectual and non interference would result in a defeat of law and a grave wrong to the aggrieved party On the other hand a Divisional Bench consisting of Sargent C J and Candy J held in Motilal v Nana (m) decided in 1894 that the High Court should not in the exercise of its discretion interfere in revision with interlocutory orders except in cases where the injured party had no other remedy open to him. No reference was made in the judgment to the Full Bench decision in

Shiva Nathaji s case The decision in Motilal v Nana was disapproved by a Divisional Bench of the same High Court in Secretary of State v Narsibhai (n) decided in 1924 and the Court followed the principle laid down in the Full Bench ruling In the course of his judgment Koyajee J observed that the section did not make the absence of another remedy a necessary condition of its applicability

The distinction between the decisions of the High Courts of Allahabad and Lahore on the one hand and those of the other High Courts on the other hand as to the meaning of the term case is brought out by the following case A institutes a suit against B in Court X One of the issues in the suit is whether Court X has jurisdiction to try the suit The Court holds that it has and that the suit must proceed B applies to the High Court for a revision of the order of Court X Has the High Court power to interfere in revision with this order which is an interlocutory order? According to the Allahabad (o) and Lahore (p) decisions the High Court has no such power as the decision of an issue in a suit is not a decision of a case within the meaning of this section According to the High Courts of Bombay (q) and Madras (r) the High Court has the power to interfere with the order in revision as the word case includes part of a case and further the High Court would in the exercise of its discretion interfere with the order if it came to the conclusion that the order was wrong though the order may be challenged in an appeal from the final decree for if Court X had no jurisdiction to try the suit it would result in unnecessary waste of time and money

As regards orders made on an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis a distinction has been made by the Allahabad High Court between an order granting the application and an order rejecting the application An order rejecting the application it has been held amounts to a decision of the case and is therefore open to revision but an order granting the application is not a decision of the case but a mere interlocutory order and it is not therefore open to revision (s) In recent Allahabad cases (t) however Walsh J expressed the opinion that no revision lies even from an order rejecting the application the ground of the decision being that it is not a case decided within the meaning of this section no opinion was expressed by Piggott J But where the Court of first instance instead of trying the question of the petitioner s pauperism tries the question of his title to the property claimed by him and finding that the title was not established dismisses the application to sue in forma pauperis the High Court can interfere in revision for in not trying the question of pauperism the Court failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it by law and in trying the question of title it exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law (u) The High Court will also interfere in revision if the lower Court dismisses the application on the ground that the petitioner s claim is barred as res judicata as such an inquiry is not warranted by the provisions of O 33 r 5 (v)

Even if the section applies to interlocutory orders no High Court will interfere in revision with an order made by the lower Court deciding that certain evidence is inadmissible (w)

Alternative remedy by way of suit or otherwise—The powers conferred upon the High Court by this section are discretionary Hence though a party may not have a remedy by way of appeal the High Court may in the exercise of its discretion refuse to interfere under this section if there is any other remedy open to the party The especial and extraordinary remedy by invoking the revisional powers of this Court should not be exercised unless as a last resource for an aggrieved litigant (x) The recognised rule is that if a party to civil proceedings applies to us to exercise our powers under s [115] he must satisfy us that he has no other remedy open to him under the law to set right that which he says has been illegally irregularly or without jurisdiction done by a subordinate Court (y) The other remedy open to the applicant must be a certain and conclusive remedy allowed by law

Upon the principle stated above no application will be entertained to revise an order made under O 21 rr 60 61 or 62 (Code of 1882 ss 280 281 282) for though no appeal lies from such order the party against whom the order is made has a special remedy by way of suit under O 21 r 63 [Code of 1882 s 283] (z) Similarly no application will be entertained to revise a decree passed in a suit for possession instituted under s 9 of the Specific Relief Act 1877 for though no appeal lies from a decree passed in such suit the party against whom the decree is passed is not precluded from instituting a regular suit to establish his title to possession (a) But if the remedy is a doubtful one the High Court may interfere by way of revision under this section (b) And even if the remedy is certain and conclusive the High Court may in an exceptional case interfere by way of revision under this section (c) No doubt the ordinary rule is that where an aggrieved party has other remedy available this Court is unwilling to interfere but it is unquestionable that even if there be such remedy this Court may interfere in exceptional cases (d) Thus where the lower Court refused the application of a decree holder for rateable distribution under s 73 on the ground that there was another property of the judgment debtor available for the satisfaction of his claim the High Court of Madras interfered on revision under this section though the applicant had clearly a remedy by suit Miller J said I do not depart from the view that where a party has a remedy elsewhere than in the High Court the High Court should not except in special cases interfere under [this section] But here we have a case in which there is no doubt as to the rights of the parties and no remedy if I do not interfere except by a suit to which there can be no defence and which therefore would surely multiply proceedings In such a case the lesser evil at any rate is interference under [this section] (e) When the Court on an erroneous view of the law refused to proceed with the suit until Court fee was paid the Madras High Court interfered with the interlocutory order as this would give more complete and efficacious relief and avoid unnecessary hardship and multiplicity of proceedings (f) In a Patna case Manuk J said When the High Court can by interfering under section 115 in appropriate cases terminate the litigation the mere fact that another remedy by suit only lies should not per se be a reason for non interference (g) In a Calcutta case the High Court interfered in revision where the lower Court refused to entertain an application for review based on an allegation of fraud though the applicant had a remedy by way of suit (h)

High Court. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that the High Court has no power to revise orders passed under sec. 205 of the Madras Estates Land Act I of 1908 by the Board of Revenue (x). The High Court of Kumaun is not a Court subordinate to the High Court of Allahabad (y). But a District Judge acting under s. 57 of the Madras Local Boards Act 14 of 1920 is a Court within the meaning of this section (z).

The Court of the Resident at Aden is subordinate to the High Court of Bombay in reference to cases to be stated by the Resident for the decision of the High Court under s. 8 of the Aden Court Act 2 of 1864 (a). His Britannic Majesty's Courts in Zanzibar are also subordinate to the High Court of Bombay (b). A Collector exercising judicial functions under the Bombay Mamlatdars Courts Act II of 1906 is a Court within the meaning of this section (c). And so is a Civil Court acting or purporting to act under the provisions of s. 10 of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 (d). It has been held by the High Court of Madras (e) and Bombay (f), that where an application is made to a Collector for a reference to the Civil Court under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894 and the application is rejected the Collector in so doing does not act as a Court and his order is not subject to revision by the High Court. The High Court of Patna has held that a Collector acting under the second proviso to s. 49 of that Act is a Court and an order made by him refusing to refer to the Civil Court a question under that proviso is subject to revision by the High Court (g). The High Court of Calcutta has held that a Collector acting under s. 11 of that Act is not a Court within the meaning of this section (h).

Decision of a single judge of a Chartered High Court.—A Judge of a chartered High Court sitting alone is not a Court subordinate to the High Court but performs a function directed to be performed by the High Court; there is therefore no revision from his decision under this section (i).

Decision of a single Judge of Chief Court of Oudh.—The Court of a single Judge of the Chief Court of Oudh sitting to hear and determine a suit of which the value is more than Rs. five lacs as provided by sec. 7 of the Oudh Courts Act 4 of 1925 is not a subordinate Court to the Chief Court which is the High Court referred to therein and therefore no revision lies against its order (j).

Jurisdiction.—Jurisdiction has been explained in the notes to s. 21. The expression jurisdiction is not confined to the jurisdiction to entertain a suit or appeal. A Court may have jurisdiction to entertain a suit or appeal and yet it may have no jurisdiction to pass a particular order in the suit or appeal. If it does so the case

High Court A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that the High Court has no power to revise orders passed under sec 20 of the Madras Estates Land Act 1 of 1908 by the Board of Revenue (x) The High Court of Kumaun is not a Court subordinate to the High Court of Allahabad (y) But a District Judge acting under s 57 of the Madras Local Boards Act 14 of 1920 is a Court within the meaning of this section ( )

The Court of the Resident at Aden is subordinate to the High Court of Bombay in reference to cases to be stated by the Resident for the decision of the High Court under s. 8 of the Aden Court Act 2 of 1864 (a) His Britannic Majesty s Courts in Zanzibar are also subordinate to the High Court of Bombay (b) A Collector exercising judicial functions under the Bombay Mamlatdar s Courts Act II of 1906 is a Court within the meaning of this section (c) And so is a Civil Court acting or purporting to act under the provisions of s 10 of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 (d) It has been held by the High Court of Madras (e) and Bombay (f) that where an application is made to a Collector for a reference to the Civil Court under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894 and the application is rejected the Collector in so doing does not act as a Court and his order is not subject to revision by the High Court The High Court of Patna has held that a Collector acting under the second proviso to s 49 of that Act is a Court and an order made by him refusing to refer to the Civil Court a question under that proviso is subject to revision by the High Court (g) The High Court of Calcutta has held that a Collector acting under s 11 of that Act is not a Court within the meaning of this section (h)

Decision of a single judge of a Chartered High Court—A Judge of a chartered High Court sitting alone is not a Court subordinate to the High Court but performs a function directed to be performed by the High Court there is therefore no revision from his decision under this section (i)

Decision of a single Judge of Chief Court of Oudh—The Court of a single Judge of the Chief Court of Oudh sitting to hear and determine a suit of which the value is more than Rs five lacs as provided by sec 7 of the Oudh Courts Act 4 of 1925 is not a subordinate Court to the Chief Court which is the High Court referred to therein and therefore no revision lies against its order (j)

Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction has been explained in the notes to s 21 The expression jurisdiction is not confined to the jurisdiction to entertain a suit or appeal A Court may have jurisdiction to entertain a suit or appeal and yet it may have no jurisdiction to pass a particular order in the suit or appeal If it does so the case is one under clause (a) of the section and the High Court is entitled to interfere in revision. This follow from the rulings of the Judicial Committee in Lachmi Narain v Balmakund (k) dealt with in the note below The same topic continued and in Brij Mohun v Rai Uma Nath (l)

Exercise by Court of jurisdiction not vested in it by law—If a Court assumes jurisdiction which by reason of the pecuniary or territorial limits of the jurisdiction of such Court or by reason of the subject matter of the suit or other proceedings instituted in it is not vested in it by law the High Court to which such Court is subordinate has power under clause (a) to interfere in revision under this section It will not however do so unless the facts from which absence of jurisdiction may be inferred are patent upon the face of the record (m) Similarly the High Court has power to interfere in revision under clause (a) if the lower appellate Court entertains an appeal from an order from which no appeal lies (n) or if a Testamentary Court appoints a receiver (o) or if the lower Court inquires into a question into which has no jurisdiction to inquire (p) or if the lower Court demands search fee on an application for copies of records in addit on to the stamps for copies (q)

For other cases under this head see notes below The same topic continued and Wrong decision of lower appellate Court as to jurisdiction of trial Court

Failure to exercise jurisdiction—Where a Court having jurisdiction to act in a matter declines jurisdiction clause (b) applies Thus where a Court has jurisdiction to accept a plaint (r) or to execute a decree (s) or to review its judgment (t) but refuses to accept the plaint or to execute the decree or to review its judgment on the ground that it has no jurisdiction the High Court will interfere under this section When a Subordinate Judge refused to allow an assignee to execute a decree the Allahabad High Court held that there was a failure to exercise jurisdiction because the Judge did not exercise his own judgment but followed a ruling which was not applicable (u) Again when the lower Court made an order on the petition that the petition will be recorded this was said to be no order at all and the Court was directed in revision to hear and dispose of it on the merits (v) Similarly where a Court refused to confirm a sale under s 312 of the Code of 1882 [now O 21 r 92] believing that it had no power to do so if the purchaser objected to the sale on the ground of misrepresentation it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the case was one in which the Court had failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law and that the decision was therefore subject to revision under the present section (w) The rejection of an application for fixing a standard rent on the ground that the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act 1920 were not applicable to the case is a refusal by the Rent Controller to exercise jurisdiction conferred upon him by the Act and is accordingly a proper case for interference under this section (x) An order returning a memorandum of appeal for presentation to another Court is also open to revision (y) Interference under this section is also appropriate where a Court has no discretionary power to refuse a relief but refuses the relief believing that it has a discretionary power to do so Thus where a Court refused the application of a decree holder for a rateable distribution under s 73 though according to its own finding he was clearly entitled to such distribution on the ground that there was other property of the judgment debtor available for the satisfaction of his claim the High Court of Madras interfered under this section ( ) But where a Court has a discretion in a matter a wrong exercise of such discretion is not a proper ground for interference under this section (a)

For other cases under this head see notes below The same topic continued and Wrong decision of lower appellate Court as to jurisdiction of trial Court

Where a Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction has acted illegally or with material irregularity—Cl (c) of the section contemplates cases other than those referred to in cls (a, and (b) This clause clearly excludes clause (b) for a Court cannot refuse to exercise its jurisdiction and act in the exercise of it with material irregularity (b) The clause refers to cases where the Court having jurisdiction and exercising it has acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of such jurisdiction (c) The words acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity have given rise to a conflict of decisions It is therefore best first to state how much is settled law and then to deal with the various interpretations put on the words illegally and with material irregularity by the various High Court

What is not illegality or material irregularity—It is settled even if it be on a point of law that where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question and it determines that question it cannot be said that it has acted illegally or with material irregularity because it has come to an erroneous decision on a question of fact or even of law —The leading case on the subject is Amir Hassan Khan v Sheo Baksh Singh (d) decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1884 In that case it was laid down by their Lordships that where a Court has jurisdiction to decide the question before it and in fact decides the question it cannot be regarded as acting in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity merely because its decision is erroneous The mere fact that the decision of the Court is wrong affords no ground for the interference of the High Court under this section In the course of the judgment their Lordships said The question then is did the Judges of the lower Courts in this case in the exercise of their jurisdiction act illegally or with material irregularity? It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them [namely whether the suit was barred as res judicata] and they did decide it Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly they had jurisdiction to decide the case and even if they decided wrongly they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity Following this decision it has been held that the High Court will not interfere under this section merely because the lower Court allowed an application which was barred by limitation (e) or wrongly decided that a suit was barred by limitation (f) or that it was barred as res judicata (g) or because the lower Court proceeded upon an erroneous construction of the sections of an Act (h) or misunderstood the effect of a document in evidence (i) or excluded evidence which it ought to have admitted (j) except where such admission was in direct contravention of a statutory provision (k) or held, though incorrectly that there was no relation of landlord and tenant between the parties to a suit or proceeding (l) or that it was not necessary to give notice to a railway company under s 77 of the Railways Act (m) or that an application to set aside a sale was not timed barred (n) or that it wrongly applied secs 130 and 131 of the Transfer of Property Act (o) Similarly no revision lies from an order passed in appeal remanding a case under O 41 r 23 below (p) though such order may be erroneous in law The cases cited above were all cases in which the Court had jurisdiction to decide the question before it and decided it in fact but the decision was impeached as being erroneous in law and was sought to be revised under the present section In all those cases the High Court held that though there was an error in law the decision was not open to revision on the ground that a mere error in law is not an illegality within the meaning of this section In all these cases the High Court might well have said in the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in another case (q) It [the lower Court] made a sad mistake it is true but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right The point was further emphasized by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balakrishna v Vasudeva (r) Referring to this section their Lordships said —

It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone the irregular exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved (s)

The rule laid down in Balakrishna s case has been interpreted or rather applied differently by different High Courts. This may be explained by an illustration A applies under O 21 r 89 to set aside a sale in execution of a decree The lower Court places a wrong interpretation on r 89 and holds that A is not a person entitled to apply under that rule and the application is dismissed A then applies to the High Court for a revision of the order of the lower Court Can the High Court interfere in revision? It has been held by the Patna High Court (t) that it can the reason given being that the case is one of a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested by law in the lower Court and therefore within this section In the course of his judgment Mullick J said The Court s decision upon the point whether the applicant has the necessary legal character is clearly a question involving jurisdiction An erroneous decision on a question of law or fact after jurisdiction has once been legally assumed would not be a ground for interference under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure but if the decision is the very basis and foundation of jurisdiction in its limited sense as distinguished from powers it at once comes within the purview of the section The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balakrishna v Vasudeva is in my opinion authority for this view The same view has been taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (u) These decisions have been dissented from by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court (v) In the

Allahabad case Banerji J after referring to Balakrishna s case said In the present case the Court was competent to determine whether [A] was entitled to make an application under O 21 r 89 and it had jurisdiction to decide that question and it decided it adversely to [A] The Court may have been wrong in its decision but it cannot be said that in the exercise of its jurisdiction it acted illegally or with material irregularity in the ense in which those words have been interpreted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case to which I have referred and in earlier cases decided by their Lordships The substantial point of difference between the e two divergent views is that the Patna and Madras High Courts treat the refusal by the lower Court to entertain the application as a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested it by law while the High Court of Allahabad regards the refusal as no more than a decision though erroneous on a point of law in the exercise of the lower Court s jurisdiction There is no difference of opinion between these Courts on the point tha where the lower Court assumes jurisdiction or refuses jurisdiction on an erroneous construction of a statute the High Court can interfere in revision The difference arises on the question—is it a case of a refusal to exercise jurisdiction or a case merely of a wrong decision on a point of law in the exercise of the Court s juri diction ? According to the Patna and Madras High Court it is the former according to the Allahabad High Court it is the latter

Following its Full Lench ruling the Madras High Court has held that though an erroneous deci ion on a point of limitation is not a ground for interference under this section the High Court can and will interfere if the Small Cause Court refuses to entertain an application for retrial of a uit tried by a single judge of that Court where such refusal proceeds on a wrong view of a question of limitation (u) It has similarly been held by that Court that where a District Judge on an erroneous construction of a statutory rule assumes juri diction to declare whether a person elected as a Pre ident of a Local Board is duly elected or not and assuming such juri diction declares his election to be void the High Court has the power to interfere under this section (x) The same High Court interfered in revision where a Subordinate Judge misconstrued the legal position in the case and refused to release the property under attachment as he should have done (y) also where the result of an erroneous decision was likely to perpetuate the error and to give rise to a multiplicity of suits not for one year but for all time (z)

The High Court of Calcutta has held that where a Judge has mi directed himself as to the meaning and effect of a section or of a rule under the Code the High Court can interfere in revision Thus where a plaintiff was allowed to withdraw his suit under O 23 r 1 with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action on the ground of a formal defect in the frame of the suit after the suit had been heard and decided against him on the merits the High Court interfered in revision (a) In another case the High Court interfered in revision on the ground that the Munsif had not directed his attention properly to the provisions of O 21 r 60 (b) The Oudh Court interfered in revision where the lower Court allowed the plaintiff to withdraw the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit the object of the withdrawal being to produce evidence in the new uit which he had omitted to produce at the right time (c) The High Court of Pangoon has held that if the lower Court fails to take into account some proposition of law or some material fact in evidence it acts illegally and its decision may be revised by the High Court but that if the lower Court has applied its mind to the case and duly considered the facts and the law applicable then although its decision may be erroneous the High Court cannot interfere in revision (d)

The same topic continued—The decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case presupposes jurisdiction in the Court whose decision is sought to be revised on the ground that it is erroneous Hence the principle of that decision does not apply where a Court erroneously assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law (e) Thus if a Court proceeding upon an erroneous construction of a section of an Act assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the decree of the lower Court as one passed without jurisdiction (f) Similarly if a Court wrongly decide that a suit i of a civil nature and entertains the suit on that basis the decision is open to revision under clause (a) of this section for no civil Court is competent to entertain a suit which is not of a civil nature (g) ee s 9 above Likewise if a Court proceeding upon an erroneous construction of a statute or upon a misapprehension of the law declines to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law the High Court has the power to interfere under clause (b) of this section (h) These really are cases under clauses (a) and (b) of the present section They are not cases under clause (c) which is the clause now under consideration The reason why these cases are mentioned here is that it was contended in those cases that as the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusal to exercise it had proceeded upon an error of law the High Court had no power to interfere under this section and the decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case was invoked in support of that contention But the High Courts held that if the case came under either clause (a) or clause (b) it was immaterial that the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusa to exercise it proceeded upon an error of law The High Court also pointed out that the basis of the decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case was that the lower Court had jurisdiction to determine the question before it and that it had determined it and all that that case decided was that an erroneous decision of a case in the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction was no ground for interference under this section

A Court has no power to dismiss a suit after the decree is passed in the suit If it does so the question arises whether the case is one of exercise of jurisdiction not vested in the Court or one of illegality or material irregularity In Lachmi Narain v Balmakund (i) the Judicial Committee held that the case was one of exercise of jurisdiction not vested in the Court In that case the High Court on appeal passed a decree by consent for a partition upon certain terms and remitted the suit to the Subordinate Judge for disposal under the decree The plaintiff failed to appear on the day appointed by the Subordinate Judge to proceed with the matter and the Judge dismissed the suit under O 17 r 2 and O 9 r 8 The plaintiff applied to the High Court for revision The High Court decided that the case came both under clause (a) and clause (c) of this section and set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and ordered the case to be restored to his file The defendants appealed from this order to the Privy Council on the ground that the High Court had no power to interfere in revision Their Lordships affirmed the decision of the High Court and said Their Lordships do not think it necessary to determine that the case came under para (c) of s 115 But they think that the order which the Subordinate Judge made was one which he had not jurisdiction to make The order of the Subordinate Judge was not merely wrong in law it was an order which he had no jurisdiction to make

Besides the cases mentioned above there are cases in which the action of the lower Court has been held not to amount to illegality or material irregularity e g failure to give notice where no notice is required to be given under the Code though it might have been given as a matter of equity (j) deciding a case without taking into consideration a point of law where such point was never raised before the Court (k) omitting to state in the order granting a review that the new matter discovered by the applicant was important (l)

What is illegality or material irregularity —Amir Hassan Khan s case decides what is not an illegality or material irregularity What is it then which does constitute an illegality or material irregularity within the meaning of this section ? The Courts have taken Amir Hasan Khan s case as the key to the solution of this question but as different Judges have put different interpretations upon the case there are many conflicting decisions as to the meaning of the words of which the following are the leading examples —

1 The words acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity refer only to an error of jurisdiction and apply only to cases of the kind contemplated by cls (a) and (b) of this section (m) As against this view it has been said that the words in question did not occur in the Code of 1877 that they were first introduced by the amending Act of 1879 that errors of jurisdiction had already been provided for by the first two clauses of the section and that the words in question must refer therefore to something other than errors of jurisdiction (n)

2 The words refer to errors of procedure only as distinguished from errors of law (o) This view proceeds mainly on the word acted In a Calcutta case Jenkins C J said It appears to me that section 115 can only be called in aid when the failure of justice (if any) has been due to one or other of the faults of procedure indicated in that section If there was an error committed [by the Small Cause Court Judge] it was an error of law and not of procedure and in my opinion Mr Justice Fletcher had no power to interfere (p) This view is supported by the recent decision of the Privy Council that it is a material irregularity to decide a case in the absence of a necessary party (q)

3 The words apply to cases where there is a wilful disregard or conscious violation by a judge of a rule of law or procedure (r) As against this view it has been said that it engrafts upon the Privy Council ruling a qualification to the effect that the High Court can interfere under the present section if the erroneous decision is the result of conscious violation by the lower Court of a rule of law or procedure and that the distinction is in no way warranted by the language of the section (s) To this it is replied that if the section did not apply to cases where a Judge consciously violated a rule of law or procedure a lower Court might with impunity wilfully disregard the decisions of the High Court or even of the Privy Council (t)

4 The words apply to cases where the decision complained of is vitiated by a gross and palpable error (u) According to this view a mistake though of law would if gross and palpable give jurisdiction to the Court under this se tion But this view runs counter to the Privy Council decision (i)

5 The words acted illegally do not merely imply the committing of an error of procedure such as the expression acted with material irregularity does Those words have relation to gross and palpable errors of Subordinate Courts resul ing in grave injustice (w)

It will not serve any useful purpose to discuss these conflicting views Suffice to say as ob erved by the Judicial Committee in Balakrishna v Vasudeva (x) that the section applies to jurisdiction alone the irregular exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved See note above Jurisdiction

Having noted the different interpretations put upon the words in qu stion we proceed to note some of the decisions reported on the subject

It is an illegality to frame an issue on a point of fact expressly admitted by the defendant and to di miss the suit on the ground that the fact is not proved (y) Similar v it is an illegality if a Court passes a decree on an unstamped hundi. The Stamp Act expressly provides that an un tamped hundi shall not be acted upon (z) [see Stamp Act II of 1899 s 35] It is an illegality if the appellate Court calls in question the admissibility of a document not duly stamped after the same has been admitted in evi dence in the Court of first instance such a course is manifestly against the provisions of the Stamp Act by which it is enacted that when an instrument has been admitted in evidence such admission shall not be called in question at any stage of the same suit (a) [see Stamp Act II of 1899 s 35] It is also an illegality to pass a decree where there is no evidence at all to support it (b) or where the evidence is obviously value less (c) or to decide a case on personal inspection of the subject matter of the suit ignoring the evidence on record (d) It is an illegality to attach in execution of a decree the tools of an artisan contrary to s 60 of the Code (e) or to attach money in a provi dent fund regulated by the Provident Funds Act (f) It is al o an illegality where a Court acts upon a rule invented by itself and not warranted by the law (g)

It is a material irregularity if a decree is passed in a suit in the absence of a party in whose absence it could not possibly be made (h) It is also a material irregularity if a Court taking a mistaken view of the que tion at issue proceeds to determine an issue which does not really arise in the case and bases its decision of the ca e on a determina tion of that issue (i) It is also a material irregularity to treat the delivery of a summons by post to a person who was not shown to be the defendant as good service and to pass a decree ex parte against the defendant on that footing (j) or to attach in execution of a personal decree against a defendant property which he holds as trustee for another (k) or to make an order against a person without hearing him (l) It is also a material irregularity for a Court to decline to go into evidence when required to do so and to proceed to dispose of the suit upon the pleadings or upon allegations made in a petition (m) or to refuse to draw up its own decree whether it be preliminary or final (n) or to refu e to grant a certificate for a refund of court fees paid on a memorandum of appeal when a case is remanded under O 41 r 23 (o) [Court Fees Act 7 of 1870 s 13] It is also a material irregularity to apply to a case a section of an Act which is not applicable to it (p) or to disregard the provisions of the Evidence Act and to place the burden of proof on a wrong party (q) or to decide a case on a point of fact not raised in the pleadings (r) Where an application is made to set aside a sale under O 21 r 80 and it is followed by another application which does no more than give additional particulars of irregularity in conducting the sale it is material irregularity to refuse to consider the second application (s)

Wrong decision of lower appellate Court as to jurisdiction of trial Court — The question to be considered under this head is whether the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere under this ection where the lower appellate Court erroneously decides in the exercise of its admitted jurisdiction as an appellate Court that the Court of first instance had or had not jurisdiction to entertain a suit Ca es of this kind arise when a Court of first instance returns a plaint on the ground that it has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and the lower appellate Court affirms the order of the Court of first instance or sets aside the order Has the High Court jurisdiction in such a case to revise the order of the lower appellate Court? It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad (t) that it has not the reason given being that if the lower appellate Court committed an error it did so in the exercise of its jurisdiction in entertaining an appeal which it was bound to entertain On the other hand it has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (u) that the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision with the order of the lower appellate Court the reason given being that the case comes either under cl. (b) or cl (c) of this section In an earlier Calcutta case (v) the High Court took the same view as that taken by the Allahabad High Court but in a later case (w) where the lower appellate Court had confirmed the order of the first Court the High Court entertained an application to revise the order of the lower appellate Court In a Bombay case (x) where the lower appellate Court had confirmed the order of the first Court and the application was for the revision of the orders of both the lower Courts the application was entertained But though the Allahabad High Court holds that the order of the lower appellate Court cannot be revi ed yet it holds that its jurisdiction to revise the order of the Court of first instance is not excluded by the fact that it wa appealable to a subordinate Court It has therefore jurisdiction to et aside that order in revision and the order of the lower appellate Court falls with it (y)

Ex parte decree — A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that the High Court has power to interfere in revision with an appellate order directing the setting aside of an ex parte decree when the Appellate Court had no power under O 9

r 13 to direct the case to be reheard (z) In one case the Lahore High Court interfered in revision when the lower Court set aside an ex parte decree even though the application to set it aside was barred by limitation (a)

Order refusing review—Where the lower Court refuses to entertain an application for review based on an allegation of fraud the High Court has power to interfere under this section (b) The section however does not apply to an order refusing to grant a review (c) When the lower Court has rightly refused to restore an execution application under O 9 the High Court has no power under this section to direct it to treat the application as one in review (d)

Order granting review—An order granting a review may be set aside in revision (e)

Lunacy—As to the power of the High Court to interfere in lunacy proceedings see the undermentioned case (f)

No revision from discretionary orders—The High Court will not interfere in revision with an order which it is in the discretion of the lower Court to make (g)

Gross miscarriage of justice—The interference of the High Court under this section in cases where the lower Court has acted illegally or with material irregularity should be confined to cases where the illegality or irregularity was such as had occasioned or might occasion a substantial failure of justice (h) Hence the judgment of a lower Court should not be set aside upon a mere technicality (i)

Sanction to prosecute—If a Civil or a Revenue Court acting under s 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code grants or refuses an application to prosecute a party to the suit or witnesses before it its order is a decision of a case within the meaning of the present section The High Court therefore has no jurisdiction to interfere under s 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to call for the proceedings of the lower Court under that section But it has power under s 115 of this Code as also under section 15 of the High Courts Act 1861 [now s 107 of the Government of India Act 1915] to call for the proceedings and to pass such order as it may deem expedient In other words the application in such cases lies on the civil revisional side of the High Court and not on the criminal revisional side But the Bench exercising criminal jurisdiction may deal with the matter if authorized to do so by the Chief Justice under section 14 of the High Courts Act 1861 [now s 108 of the Government of India Act 1915] (j) The rule is

Appeal —By cl. 15 of the Letters Patent as amended in March 1919 it is provided that no appeal lies from an order made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction. Prior to the amendment there was a conflict of decisions as to whether an appeal lay to the High Court under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of a single Judge delivered in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction under this section. The matter stood thus it was enacted by cl 15 of the Letters Patent as it stood before the amendment that an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the judgment of one Judge of the High Court or one Judge of any Division Court pursuant to s 13 of the Charter Act Now s 13 of the Charter Act provides for the exercise by the Judges of the High Court of the original and appellate jurisdiction vested in the High Court This gave rise to the question whether the division of jurisdiction into (1) original and (2) appellate was exhaustive or not If the division was exhaustive revisional jurisdiction must be treated as comprised in appellate jurisdiction so that an appeal would lie under cl. 15 from the judgment of a single Judge exercising revisional jurisdiction If the division was not exhaustive so that revisional jurisdiction was something outside the original and appellate jurisdiction the case would not fall within s 13 of the Charter Act and no appeal could therefore lie under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent It was held by the High Courts of Madras (m) and Calcutta (n) that the division of the juris diction of High Courts into original and appellate was exhaustive and that revisional jurisdiction was included in appellate jurisdiction and that an appeal therefore lay under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order of a single Judge made under the present section, provided such order amounted to a judgment within the meaning of that clause. The contrary was held by the High Court of Bombay (o) it does not however appear that there was any judgment in the Bombay case (p)

Rules as to original civil procedure of Chartered High Courts —Rules made under s 122 must not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code Under this section any Chartered High Court may make rules to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction Such rules may not be consistent with the provisions in the body of the Code but they must not be inconsistent with the Letters Patent establishing it The Letters Patent here referred to are the Letters Patent of 1865 those being the Letters Patent in force when the present Code was enacted, and not the Letters Patent of 1862 (u)

PART XI

Miscellaneous

132 [S 640] (1) Women who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court

Exemption of certain women from personal appearance

(2) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to exempt such women from arrest in execution of civil process in any case in which the arrest of women is not prohibited by this Code

Appearance in Court —This section provides for exemption of purdanashin ladies from personal appearance in Court but not from attendance in Court The word appearance means that a purdanashin lady shall not be compelled to come forth into view or to become visible to the public gaze The Court therefore has power to order a purdanashin lady to give evidence in Court provided she is not compelled to come forth into view or to become visible to the public gaze (w) See notes to O 26 r 1 Persons exempted from attending Court

133 [S 641] (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, exempt from personal appearance in Court any person whose rank, in the opinion of such Government, entitles him to the privilege of exemption

Exemption of other persons

(2) The names and residences of the persons so exempted shall, from time to time, be forwarded to the High Court by the Local Government and a list of such persons as reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of each Court subordinate to the High Court shall be kept in such subordinate Court

(3) Where any person so exempted claims the privilege of such exemption, and it is consequently necessary to examine him by commission, he shall pay the costs of that commission, unless the party requiring his evidence pays such costs

134 [New] The provisions of sections 55, 57 and 59 shall apply, so far as may be, to all persons arrested under this Code

Arrest other than in execution of decree

This section is new It supplies an omission

135 [S 642] (1) No Judge, Magistrate or other judicial officer shall be liable to arrest under civil process while going to, presiding in, or returning from, his Court

Exemption from arrest under civil process

(2) Where any matter is pending before a tribunal having jurisdiction therein, or believing in good faith that it has such jurisdiction, the parties thereto, their pleaders, mukhtars, revenue agents, and recognized agents, and their witnesses, acting in obedience to a summons, shall be exempt from arrest under civil process other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court while going to or attending such tribunal for the purpose of such matter, and while returning from such tribunal

(3) Nothing in sub section (2) shall enable a judgment-debtor to claim exemption from arrest under an order for immediate execution or where such judgment debtor attends to show cause why he should not be committed to prison in execution of a decree

1 The words other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court in sub s (2) have been added to give effect to a Calcutta decision (x)

2 Sub section (3) is new It has been substituted for the words except as provided in section 337A sub section (5) and sections 556 and 643 which occurred at the commencement of sub section (2) in the Code of 1882

Grounds of exemption from arrest —The exemption here conferred is not for the personal benefit of the individual but for the furthering of public interests and the better administration of justice In other words the exemption is not the privilege of the person attending the Court but that of the Court which he attends If therefore a witness does not believe bona fide that his attendance was required there is no privilege (y) For the same reason where a writ of attachment for contempt of Court has been issued against a party to a suit he cannot claim privilege from arrest while proceeding to Court for the purpose of attending the hearing of the suit ( )

While going to or attending and while returning from Court —A party to a suit is exempt from arrest under this section while going to or attending the Court before which the suit is pending and while returning from such Court The following are the leading cases bearing on this part of the section —

(1) Where a plaintiff who was a native of Patna and who had instituted a suit in the High Court of Madras left Patna on receiving a letter from his solicitors that his presence was required and arrived at Madras on 24th October and the suit having come on for hearing on the 27th of October was adjourned till the 25th of December and he was arrested in execution of a decree against him on the 10th of November it was held by the High Court of Madras that he was privileged from arrest (a) This decision was disapproved by the Allahabad High Court (b) in the case cited in ill (2) below but it is in accordance with the decision of the House of Lords in the under mentioned case (c)

(2) A residing in Bombay goes to Benares to prosecute an application to set aside an ex parte decree passed against him by the Benares Court and puts up at a Dak bungalow in Benares On the date fixed for the hearing of the application A attends the Court when his application is heard and dismissed He then leaves the Court returns to the Dak bungalow and thence proceeds to the railway station where he is arrested in execution of the decree while actually seated in the train It is found on evidence that A had taken a ticket for Allahabad when arrested On the above facts the High Court of Allahabad held that A s arrest was legal The Court said In the present case [A] had left the Court and had returned to the place where [he] was staying in Benares he had then left that place and [was] actually on his way to Allahabad which is not his home In these circumstances we cannot hold that he at the time of arrest was returning from a tribunal within the meaning of section 135 (d)

(3) The exemption from arrest continues during such period as is reasonably occupied in going to attending at and returning from the place of trial (e) But if there is a deviation the privilege is forfeited It is not a deviation sufficient to forfeit the privilege if the shortest road home is deviated from and a less crowded and more convenient road adopted (f)

(4) A debtor who is released from jail under an order of the Court on the ground that the order under which he was committed was illegal may be arrested under civil process immediately after he is released He is not privileged from arrest as returning from Court It does not follow because imprisonment followed on an order which was illegal that he should be treated when released from jail as returning from Court (g)

(5) A is arrested in execution of a decree obtained against him by B and is brought before the Court While he is in the custody of the Court s officers he is arrested in execution of a decree obtained against him by C A is not exempt from arrest in execution of C s decree It cannot be said that A while he was under arrest in execution of B s decree was voluntarily in Court in connection with the execution of B s decree (h)

Parties —A defendant in a summary suit under O 37 [Code of 1882 chapter 39] is privileged from arrest though he has not obtained leave to defend the suit (i)

Civil process —This section applies only to witnesses and parties arrested under writs issued by Courts to which the Code applies It does not apply where a party is arrested under a writ issued from a Small Cause Court As there is no provision in the Small Cause Court Act corresponding to this section questions as to exemption from arrest in the case of persons arrested under writs issued from Small Cause Courts must be governed by the principles of the English law on the subject There are very much the same as those set forth in the present section (j)

Appeal —Where a judgment debtor arrested in execution of a decree claims exemption from arrest under this section but the exemption is not allowed the order is one under s 47 and is appealable (k)

Exemption of members of legislative bodies from arrest and detention under civil process

135A (1) No person shall be liable to arrest or detention in prison under civil process—

(a) If he is a member of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature or of a Legislative Council constituted under the Government of India Act during the continuance of any meeting of such Chamber or Council,

(b) If he is a member of any committee of such Chamber or Council, during the continuance of any meeting of such committee,

(c) If he is a member of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature, during the continuance of a joint sitting of the Chambers, or of a meeting of a conference or joint committee of the Chambers of which he is a member, and during the fourteen days before and after such meeting or sitting

(2) A person released from detention under sub section (1) shall, subject to the provisions of the said sub section, be liable to re arrest and to the further detention to which he would have been liable if he had not been released under the provisions of sub section (1)

This section was added by s 3 of Act 23 of 1925

Procedure where person to be arrested or property to be attached is outside district

136 [S 648] (1) Where an application is made that any person shall be arrested or that any property shall be attached under any provision of this Code not relating to the execution of decrees, and such person resides or such property is situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application is made the Court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant of arrest or make an order of attachment, and send to the District Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person or property resides or is situate a copy of the warrant or order together with the probable amount of the costs of the arrest or attachment

(k) (19 4) 47 Mad L J 678 84 I C 513 (4) A M 900 supra.

(2) The District Court shall, on receipt of such copy and amount, cause the arrest or attachment to be made by its own officers, or by a Court subordinate to itself, and shall inform the Court which issued or made such warrant or order of the arrest or attachment

(3) The Court making an arrest under this section shall send the person arrested to the Court by which the warrant of arrest was issued, unless he shows cause to the satisfaction of the former Court why he should not be sent to the latter Court, or unless he furnishes sufficient security for his appearance before the latter Court or for satisfying any decree that may be passed against him by that Court, in either of which cases the Court making the arrest shall release him

(4) Where a person to be arrested or movable property to be attached under this section is within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal or at Madras or at Bombay, or of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, the copy of the warrant of arrest or of the order of attachment, and the probable amount of the costs of the arrest or attachment, shall be sent to the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay or Rangoon, as the case may be, and that Court, on receipt of the copy and amount, shall proceed as if it were the District Court

Arrest and attachment otherwise than in execution of decree—This section prescribes the procedure to be followed where a person is to be arrested or where property is to be attached otherwise than in execution of a decree

Order of arrest for contempt of Court—It has been held in Calcutta that a Judge of the Calcutta High Court sitting on its original side has no power to direct a mofussil Court to execute a warrant of arrest for contempt of Court But if he grants an injunction and the order is disobeyed he may direct the arrest and detention of the offender under O 39 r 2 in which case the present section will apply (l)

The Madras High Court has held that when an injunction issued by a Division Bench of the High Court on the Appellate Side is disobeyed by a party residing in the mofussil the Bench has the power to send to the appropriate mofussil Court the warrant of arrest for execution whether this section applies in terms or not and the mofussil Court on receipt of the warrant must proceed as provided in this section (m) In the Madras case the Court treated the disobedience of the injunction as contempt of Court It is difficult to understand why when an injunction had actually been granted the Court did not proceed under O 39 r 2 in which case there could have been no doubt as to the applicability of the present section to the case

Language of subordinate Courts

137 [S 645] (1) The language which, on the commencement of this Code, is the language of any Court subordinate to a High Court shall continue to be the language of such subordinate Court until the Local Government otherwise directs

(2) The Local Government may declare what shall be the language of any such Court and in what character applications to and proceedings in such Court shall be written

(3) Where this Code requires or allows anything other than the recording of evidence to be done in writing in any such Court such writing may be in English, but if any party or his pleader is unacquainted with English, a translation into the language of the Court shall, at his request, be supplied to him, and the Court shall make such order as it thinks fit in respect of the payments of the costs of such translation

Sub section (3) is new

Power for Local Government to require evidence to be recorded in English

138 [S 185A] (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette direct with respect to any Judge specified in the notification or falling under a description set forth therein, that evidence in cases in which an appeal is allowed shall be taken down by him in the English language and in manner prescribed

(2) Where a judge is prevented by any sufficient reason from complying with a direction under sub-section (1), he shall record the reason and cause the evidence to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court

Oath on affidavit by whom to be administered

139 [S 197] In the case of any affidavit under this Code—

(a) any Court or Magistrate, or

(b) any officer or other person whom a High Court may appoint in this behalf or

140 [S 645A] (1) In any Admiralty or Vice Admiralty cause of salvage, towage or collision, the Court, whether it be exercising its original or its appellate jurisdiction, may, if it thinks fit, and shall, upon request of either party to such cause, summon to its assistance, in such manner as it may direct or as may be prescribed, two competent assessors, and such assessors shall attend and assist accordingly

Assessors in causes of salvage etc

(2) Every such assessor shall receive such fees for his attendance, to be paid by such of the parties as the Court may direct or as may be prescribed

141 [S 647] The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction

Miscellaneous proceedings

This section does not apply to proceedings in execution —S 647 of the Code of 1882 as it stood when that Code was first enacted ran as follows —

The procedure herein prescribed shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals

The question arose under that section whether the words proceedings other than suits and appeals included proceedings in execution in other words whether that section had the effect of rendering the provisions of the Code relating to suits applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree On the one hand by the High Courts of Allahabad (n) and Bombay (o) held that that section applied to applications for execution of decrees so that the procedure relating to suits was applicable to applications for execution On the other hand the High Court of Calcutta held that that section did not apply to proceedings in execution (p) In this state of authorities the Legislature intervened and an Explanation was added into the section by the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act 6 of 1892 which ran as follows —

Explanation —This section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits

The effect of the above Explanation was to supersede the Allahabad and Bombay rulings above referred to and to give legislative sanction to the Calcutta decision

In the meantime one of the Allahabad cases referred to above namely the case of Fakir ullah v Thakur Prasad (q) was taken up to the Privy Council and that tribunal held in the year 1894 that independently of the Explanation s 647 did not apply to applications for execution but only to original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates guardianships and so forth thus overruling the Allahabad and Bombay cases (r) This decision if it had come three years earlier would have rendered the Explanation unnecessary The Privy Council decision and the recognition of the rule that sec 647 does not apply to execution proceedings render the explanation unnecessary, and it has accordingly been omitted in the present section (s) At the same time two alterations have been made in the section namely (1) the words in regard to suits have been added and (2) the words other than suits and appeals have been omitted In so doing the Legislature has now done what it could have done as well in 1892

The reason why the words other than suits and appeals which occurred at the end of s 647 have been omitted in the present section is this S 647 applied to proceedings other than suits and appeals The High Court of Allahabad held that applications for the execution of decrees were proceedings other than suits and appeals and that s 647 applied therefore to such applications (t) On the other hand the High Court of Calcutta held that applications for the execution of decrees were not proceedings other than suits and appeals they being proceedings in suits and that s 647 did not therefore apply to such applications (u) The Legislature adopted the view of the Calcutta High Court and enacted by way of Explanation to the section that the section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits It would have been a shorter cut if the Legislature had amended s 647 by deleting the words other than suits and appeals as those were the words that gave rise to the conflict instead of adding into the section an Explanation which certainly was not happily worded What the Legislature omitted to do in 1892 it did in 1908

This section we have said does not apply to proceedings in execution (r) Hence the procedure provided in the Code in regard to suits does not apply to applications for execution of decrees The following are the leading decisions on the subject —

1 The provisions of s 11 relating to res judicata in regard to suits do not apply to applications for the execution of decrees But though these provisions do not in terms apply to applications for execution they are governed by principles analogous to those of res judicata See note to s 11 Orders in execution proceedings on p 77 above

2 The provisions of O 2 r 2 [Code of 1882 s 43] do not apply to applications for execution Hence where a decree awards two distinct reliefs an application to enforce one relief is no bar to a subsequent application to enforce the other relief though both reliefs are awarded by the same decree (w)

3 The provisions of O 9 [Code of 1882 ss 96 to 109] do not apply to applications for execution Hence if the applicant fails to appear at the hearing of the application the Court cannot dismiss the application under O 9 r 8 [Code of 1882 s 102] though it may do so under its inherent power (x) And where in the exercise of this power an application for execution is dismissed the Court has no power to restore it to the file under O 9 r 9 [Code of 1882 s 103] (y) as that rule does not apply to execution proceedings But though the Court has no power to restore to the file an application which has once been dismissed for default such dismissal is no bar to a fresh application for execution (z) See notes to O 9 r 9 and O 9 r 13 Execution proceedings

4 The provisions of O 17 rr 2 3 [Code of 1882 ss 157 158] do not apply to applications for execution Hence an order dismissing an application for default is no bar to a fresh application for execution (a)

5 The provisions of O 23 r 1 [Code of 1882 s 373] do not apply to applications for execution Hence the withdrawal of an application though it be without the leave of the Court is no bar to a fresh application for execution (b) See now O 23 r 4

Other cases under this section are considered in their proper place

Proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction —The proceedings spoken of in this section refer to original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probate guardianship and so forth and do not include execution (c) An application under s 18 of the Religious Endowments Act 1863 is a proceeding of this nature Hence it must be verified as required by O 6 r 15 of the Code (d) But an application for settlement of rents made to a Revenue Officer under s 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 is not a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction Hence the petition need not be signed as required by O 6 r 14 (e) A petition by a company to the High Court under the Indian Companies Memorandum of Association Act 1895 for the confirmation of a special resolution altering the Memorandum of Association of the Company is a proceeding within the meaning of this section Therefore where the petition was dismissed and the Company applied for leave to appear to the Privy Council the case was dealt with by the Court under s 595 of the Code of 1882 [now s 109] (f) Similarly an application to set aside an ex parte payment order made under the Indian Companies Act 6 of 1882 is a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction Hence the provisions of O 9 r 13 apply to the case (g) An application under s 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act 1890 is a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction Hence a receiver may be appointed in such a proceeding under O 40 r 1 (h) But an application for a succession certificate under the Succession Certificate Act 1889 is not such a proceeding Hence a receiver cannot be appointed under O 40 in such a proceeding (i) An application for the appointment of a Common Manager under s 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 is a proceeding of the kind contemplated by this section a receiver therefore may be appointed under O 40 r 1 pending the application (j) Disciplinary proceedings taken under s 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879 are not proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction within the meaning of this section therefore the procedure provided by s 24 of the Code does not apply to those proceedings (k) An application under para 17 of Schedule II to file an agreement to refer to arbitration comes within this section hence where an application is made under that para the applicant may join several causes of action in the application as provided by O 2 r 3 below (l) An inquiry before a Commissioner appointed by a Court to ascertain the amount of mesne profits payable by one party to another is a proceeding within the meaning of this section Hence the provisions of O 18 r 1

The procedure provided in this Code —This section extends the procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits to proceedings in Civil Courts It does not confer any substantive right not expressly given elsewhere by the Code e g a right of appeal (n) Hence no appeal lies from an order passed on a proceeding of the kind contemplated by this section unless the order comes within the purview of O 43 (o) Nor does an appeal lie from an order returning a memorandum of appeal to the proper Court (p) Further the section does not confer upon any Court entertaining such proceedings a power not expressly given elsewhere by the Code e g the power to refer questions to the High Court [s 113] (q)

When a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter desires to obtain execution of the same he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits

The new section—Sub sec (1) of the present section is s 583 so recast as to give legislative recognition to the practice founded on that section

Sub sec (2) is new See notes below Sub section (2) bar of suit and Where a decree is varied or reversed

Restitution—The word restitution in this section means restoring to a party on the variation or reversal of a decree what has been lost to him in execution of the decree or directly in consequence of that decree The section does not apply unless the property was lost in execution of the decree or directly in consequence of that decree (r) The restitution moreover must be properly consequential on the variation or reversal of the decree (s) The granting of restitution however is not discretionary The principle of the doctrine of restitution is that on the reversal of a decree in appeal the law raises an obligation in the party to the suit who received the benefit of the erroneous decree to make restitution to the other party for what he has lost (t) The decree of reversal necessarily carries with it the right to restitution of all that has been taken under the erroneous decree and the Court in making restitution is bound to restore the parties so far as they can be restored to the same position they were in at the time when the Court by its erroneous action had displaced them from it (u)

The doctrine of restitution contemplates the case where property has been received by a decree holder in execution of a decree and the decree or part thereof is subsequently varied or reversed on appeal by the judgment debtor In such a case the procedure to be adopted by the judgment debtor is to apply under this section to the Court of first instance for restitution of the property and for consequential relief On such application being made the Court shall cause restitution to be made to the judgment debtor (the successful appellant) The restitution to be made must be such as will so far as may be place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for the decree appealed from or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed (v) This principle applies with equal force whether restitution has or has not been directed in the appellate decree (w) For the purpose of making such restitution as aforesaid the Court may make any orders including orders for the refund of costs (x) and for the payment of interest (y) damages (z) compensation and mesne profits (a) which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal In directing restitution it is to be noted that the parties must be placed in the same position as they were previously in irrespective of any other rights accruing to any of them during the litigation (b) Where an order is made against a party for restitution but restitution is not made the order may be enforced by sale of his property [s 36] (c) decree and the decree is reversed in appeal. B then applies for restitution of the property and the property is restored to him. Subsequently B applies for mesne profits for the period during which A was in possession of the property. Is B debarred from claiming mesne profits on the ground that he ought to have included the claim for mesne profits in the application for restitution of the property? No. (e) Similarly a judgment debtor who applies for and obtains restitution of a sum of money on reversal by the appellate Court of the decree pursuant to which he had paid the sum to the decree holder is not precluded from making a fresh application for recovery of interest for the period during which the decree holder had the use of the money. (f)

Inherent power to grant restitution.—The power of a Court to grant restitution is not confined to the cases covered by the provisions of this section. It extends also to cases which do not come strictly within this section. The reason is that a Court has an inherent power under s. 151 irrespective of this section to order restitution. (g)

In Jai Berham v. Kedar Nath Marwari (h) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "It is the duty of the Court under s. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code to place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed. Nor indeed does this duty or jurisdiction arise merely under the said section. It is inherent in the general jurisdiction of the Court to act rightly and fairly according to the circumstances towards all parties involved. As was said by Cairns L. C. in Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (i): 'One of the first and highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors and when the expression the act of the Court is used it does not mean merely the act of the primary Court or of any intermediate Court of Appeal, but the act of the Court as a whole from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter up to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case.'" In Jai Berham's case a sale in execution of a decree was set aside on the ground that the sale certificate comprised property different from that which was attached. The property was purchased by a stranger to the decree and the price paid by him into Court was applied towards satisfaction of the decree. The judgment debtor applied for possession. Their Lordships held that both under s. 144 and s. 151 the purchaser was entitled to be paid the excess of the purchase price over the mesne profits. This decision, it is submitted, is an authority for the proposition that where an application for restitution does not come strictly within the purview of this section, e.g., where the sale alone is set aside in execution proceedings but the decree is not varied or reversed, or where the decree and the sale are set aside in a separate suit, the Court may entertain the application under the inherent power conferred upon it by s. 151. If this view be correct it will be needless for the Courts in future to resort to s. 47 which can only apply if the decree holder himself is the purchaser or where the purchaser is a stranger to the decree he is regarded as a representative either of the decree holder or of the purchaser within the meaning of that section. It is also submitted that a proceeding under this section is not a proceeding in execution.

In the exercise of their inherent power the Courts have applied the principle of this section to cases which were not strictly within the terms of the section. Thus where A sued B to establish his right to a fund in Court and B was allowed to draw the money on giving an undertaking to the Court to repay it if A succeeded in the suit and A succeeded in e tablishing his title it was held that though the undertaking given by B did not provide for the payment of interest the Court had inherent power to order B to repay the money with interest (j) See notes below Where a decree is varied or reversed

Place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree as has been reversed — A party is not entitled under this section to restitution of property which was not in his posses ion before suit but was in pos ession of the oppo ite party and which therefore could not have been taken out of his possession under any decree of Court A applies for letters of administration to the estate of Y B sets up a will of the deceased The movable properties in dispute are in the possession of B B delivers the properties to a Commissioner appointed by the Court who locks them up in a room under seal The High Court directs probate of the will to be granted to B Thereafter on B s application the movables are handed over to her Subsequently the order of the High Court is reversed by His Majesty in Council and letters of administration are directed to be granted to A A then applies under this section for restitution of the properties to him A is not entitled to restitution The case is not one of restitution at all for A was never in possession of the properties (k) But the fact that the property had been taken from a Receiver appointed by the Court does not affect the right of the true owner to restitution for the Receiver was in possession on behalf of the true owner (l)

Who may apply for restitution — Any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise may apply under this section

(1) Where decree proceeds on a common ground —The expression any party is not confined to parties to the appeal in which the decree has been reversed or modified It includes every person against whom the decree appealed from was passed though he was no a party to the appeal provided the appeal is in effect and substance in favour of such person (m) This would e pecially be the case where the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants (n) see O 41 r 4 A obtains a decree against B and C The decree proceeds on a ground common to both B and C B alone appeals from the decree The decree is reversed in appeal C is entitled to claim restitution under this section though he was not a party to the appeal

(2) Tran f ree of a decree —Further the expres ion any party includes the transferee of a decree pas ed in appeal A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5 000 B appeals from the decree Pending the appeal A realizes from B Rs 5 000 in execution The decree is sub equently rever ed in appeal B assigns the d cree pas ed in appeal (in his favour) to C C is entitled as transferee of B s decree to the benefit of that decree and he may apply under this section for an order directing A to pay to him what B would be entitled to namely Rs 5 000 and interest (o)

(3) Auction purchaser — A ale in execution of a decree may be set a ide in a proper ca e even against a purcha er who is a stranger to the decree either in execution proceedings or in a separate suit e g where the sale certificate comprises property different from that which i attached (p) or when a decree is obtained on a mortgage executed by a Hindu father on behalf of him elf and his minor son and the decree and the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree are set aside in a suit by the minor against the decree holder and the auction purchaser on the ground that the mortgage did not bind the minor (q) But the auction purchaser is entitled in such cases before restoring possession to the judgment debtor to be paid the purchase price by the successful judgment debtor less the mesne profits if the sale is set aside in execution proceeding under this section (r) and if the sale is set aside by a decree in a separate suit under O 47 or s 151 (s) It has been held by the High Court of Rangoon that an auction purchaser who is not a party to the original suit or to the appeal or to the execution proceedings is not entitled to apply under this section (t)

Against whom restitution may be claimed —

(1) Transferee of decree reversed in appeal.—In two Allahabad cases decided under the old section it was held that restitution could not be claimed by application under that section against the transferee of a decree reversed in appeal though the transferee had obtained the full benefit of the decree by execution unless he was joined as a party to the appeal (u) The point of the decision may be explained by an illustration A obtains a decree against B and assigns the decree to C C applies for execution of the decree against B and obtains payment of the decretal amount B appeals from the decree and the decree is reversed in appeal It was held under the old section that B could not claim restitution against C by summary process under that section unless C was joined as a party to the appeal (v) Those decisions might perhaps be supported on the ground that where a party sought restitution under the old section he had to proceed by an application to execute the decree passed on appeal and that a decree cannot be executed against persons who are not parties to it The language of the present section is much wider and it is submitted that the Court has power under this section to order C to make restitution to B on an application by the latter in that behalf even if C was not joined as a party to the appeal See also s 146 It is worth noting that according to the same High Court B could not claim restitution against C even by way of suit the reason given being that B could have no cause of action in such a case against C But this decision has been dissented from by the High Court of Madras (w)

(2) Auction purchaser —Except in cases of the kind mentioned in case (3) under the heading Who may apply for restitution restitution cannot be obtained under this section against a bona fide purchaser for value at an auction sale held by a Court which had jurisdiction to order the sale (x) It is otherwise however where the decree holder himself is the purchaser (y) See note to s 65 above Effect of reversal of decree upon sale

separate suit shall be brought in respect of it The decisions under the Code of 1882 were not uniform it having been held in some cases that a separate suit for restitution was barred and in others that it was not (a)

Under s 583 of the Code of 1882 proceedings for restitution had to be commenced by an application for execution of the appellate decree This was required by the terms of that section The section further directed that the appellate decree should be executed according to the rules prescribed for the execution of decree in suits That gave rise to the question whether the rule contained in s 244 [now s 47] which provided that all questions relating to execution should be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit was one of the rules referred to in s 583 It was held in some cases that it was and that a separate suit for restitution was therefore barred. In other cases it was held that it was not and that a separate suit could be maintained for restitution The present section simplifies matters by omitting all reference to execution The position of the section has also been changed it being transferred from the chapter headed Of appeals from original decrees to Part IX headed Miscellaneous A separate suit is now barred by the express terms of the section and the application for restitution is no longer one for execution of the appellate decree The Court is empowered to make such order as it deems proper for restitution and the order if not obeyed may be enforced as a decree (b) [see s 36]

It must be observed that the suit that is barred under this section is a suit to obtain restitution compensation or other relief which could be obtained by application under this section further the compensation to be awarded under this section must be consequential on the variation or reversal of a decree It follows that if the compensation claimed is not consequential on such variation or reversal a separate suit for such compensation will not be barred under this section (c)

Decree —An order for rateable distribution made under s 73 is not a decree within the meaning of this section (d)

Where a decree is varied or reversed —The old section applied only where the decree of reversal was a decree passed in first appeal or where by virtue of s 587 [now s 108] it was one passed in second appeal It was held not to apply where restitution was claimed on the reversal of a decree in appeal to the Privy Council (e) or in review (f) This was because the words of that section were when a party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter that is chapter 41 relating to appeals from original decrees

As regards the present section there is a difference of opinion According to one view the section applies in all cases where a decree is varied or reversed however the variation or reversal is effected even though it be in a separate suit and by whatever Court (g) or even under colour of a decree (h) According to another view the section does not apply unless the decree is varied or reversed by a Court superior to the one that passed it This view is based on the ground that the words Court of first instance in this section are used to distinguish the Court which is to grant the restitution from some other Court which has varied or reversed the decree (i) The point of difference between these two views is brought out by the following—

Illustration

A obtains an ex parte decree against B in Court X In execution of the decree a house belonging to B is sold by Court X and it is purchased by A Subsequently on B's application the ex parte decree is set aside by Court X B then applies to Court X for an order against A for restoring possession of the house to him According to the former view Court X may direct restitution under this section though the decree was both passed and set aside by that Court (j) According to the latter view restitution cannot be ordered under this section (k) but the Court may grant restitution under s 151 (l) or under s 47 (m)

Does this section apply where the decree is neither varied nor reversed but the sale alone is set aside as under O 21 r 92? It has been held that it does not but that the Court may in such a case grant restitution in the exercise of its inherent power under s 151 Thus where A obtained a decree against B and in execution of the decree purchased certain property belonging to B and took possession of it and the sale was subsequently set aside under O 21 r 92 and possession restored to B it was held on an application by B for mesne profits that as no decree had been set aside this section did not apply but that the Court may in the exercise of its inherent power direct A to pay mesne profits to B during the period A was in possession of the property (n) See note above Inherent power to grant restitution.

To claim restitution it is not necessary that the original decree should have been entirely reversed The section also provides for the case where the decree is varied Thus if A obtains a decree against B for Rs 1 000 and in execution B's property is sold and purchased by A himself and the decree is varied in appeal by reducing the amount to Rs 100 the Court has power under this section to order A to restore the property to B on payment of Rs 100 by B (o)

The Court of first instance—In a suit for ejectment under the Agra Tenancy Act 2 of 1910 [local] the Court of first instance is the Revenue Court which heard the suit and not the Court of Appeal (p) If the Court of first instance has been abolished or has ceased to have jurisdiction the phrase must be interpreted by applying the principle of s 37 above (q)

Pecuniary jurisdiction in awarding damages under this section—The Court of first instance has jurisdiction under this section to award damages even if they exceed the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction (r)

Whether a proceeding under this section is a proceeding in execution—An application for restitution under s 583 of the Code of 1882 was held to be one by way of execution (s) There is a conflict of opinion whether a proceeding under this section is a proceeding in execution It has been held by the High Court of Madras (t) and

Bombay (u) that it is while it has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (t) and Patna (w) that it is not This distinction is important in the following respects —

(1) If an application under this section is one by way of execution, it would be governed by art 182 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act and further s 6 of that Act relating to the exclusion of the period of minority would apply to the application (x) If it is not it would be governed by the residuary article 181 (y) If art 181 applies the time is to be counted from the date of the decree of the lower appellate Court varying or reversing the decree of the Court of first instance and not the date of the decree in second appeal dismissing the appeal from the decree of the lower appellate Court (z)

(2) If an application under this section is one by way of execution the provisions of s 141 would not apply [see notes to s 141] But they would apply if it is not one by way of execution In the latter case if the application is dismissed for default it may be restored under O 9 r 9 (a)

(3) The difference between the two views also affects the Court fee on a memorandum of appeal from an order passed under this section (b) See note below Court fee See also note above Splitting of claim for restitution

The Allahabad High Court has held that an application for restitution as a result of a decree of Privy Council is one to enforce an order in Council and that art 183 of sch. I of the Limitation Act 1908 applies (c)

Limitation—See note above Whether a proceeding under this section is a proceeding in execution

Applicability of s 141—See note above Whether a proceeding under this section is a proceeding in execution

Appeal—The determination of a question under this section is a decree and appealable as such (d) see s 2 cl (2) definition of decree But the question must be one directly covered by the section and not one incidentally connected with or collateral to the decision of any such question Thus a decision that an application under this section is time barred is a decision on a question collateral to the question of restitution and hence it is not a decree and not appealable as such (e)

Court fee—It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that an appeal from an order made on an application under this section requires to be stamped ad valorem under the Court Fees Act 1870 sch I art 1 as an appeal from a decree This proceeds on the view taken by that Court that an application under this rule is not an application for execution (f)

Enforcement of liability of surety

145 [S 253] Where any person has become liable as surety—

(a) for the performance of any decree or any part thereof, or

(b) for the restitution of any property taken in execution of a decree, or

(c) for the payment of any money, or for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person, under an order of the Court in any suit or in any proceeding consequent thereon, the decree or order may be executed against him, to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable, in the manner herein provided for the execution of decrees, and such person shall, for the purposes of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of section 47

Provided that such notice as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety

The old section—The corresponding s 253 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows —

Whenever a person has before the passing of a decree in an original suit become liable as surety for the performance of the same or of any part thereof the decree may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable in the same manner as a decree may be executed against a defendant

Provided that such notice in writing as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety

The new section—The present section differs from the old section in the following respects —

1 The old section applied only to surety bonds for the performance of a decree It did not apply to surety bonds for the fulfilment of a condition imposed upon a person under an order of the Court [see cl (c) of the present section] It was also doubtful whether the old section applied to suretyships for the restitution of property taken in execution of a decree [see cl. (b) of the present section] The present section applies not only to surety bonds for the performances of a decree but also to surety bonds referred to above as also to bonds for the payment of money under an order of the Court See notes below

2 The present section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree whether original or appellate [see cl. (a)] As to the old section it was doubtful whether it applied to original decrees only or applied also to appellate decrees

3 The word personally has been newly added in the present section

Object of the section—This section provides that where a person has become liable as surety for the performance of a decree [cl (a)] or for any of the purposes specified in cl. (b) or cl (c) the party for whose benefit security has been given may enforce the security by executing the decree or order against the surety to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable in the same manner as if the surety was a party to the decree or order and was directed by the decree or order to perform the obligation undertaken by him It is no longer necessary to institute a regular suit to enforce the security as it was in some cases under the old section. The present section provides a summary remedy in execution and dispenses with the necessity of a separate suit to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable

Security for the performance of any decree —

1 Ex parte decree — A obtains an ex parte decree against B The decree is set aside under O 9 r 13 [Code of 1882 s 108] on C standing surety for the performance of any decree that may be passed against B on a re hearing The suit is re heard and a decree is passed against B A may enforce the security by executing the decree against C (g) A separate suit is not necessary

2 Appellate decree —The summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree whether it be an original or an appellate decree Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the summary remedy provided by that section applied at all to suretyships for the performance of appellate decrees it being held by the High Court of Calcutta that it did not (h) and by the other High Courts that it did (i) The present section makes it clear that the summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to security given for the performance of appellate decrees also The rules that provide for security for the performance of appellate decrees are rules 5 and 6 of Order 41 corresponding to ss 545 and 546 of the Code of 1882 An illustration will make the point clear A obtains a decree against B and applies for execution B appeals from the decree and applies for stay of execution under O 41 r 5 Execution is stayed on C standing surety for the due performance of any decree that may be passed against B in appeal A decree is eventually passed by the appellate Court against B A may enforce the security against C by executing the appellate decree against him as if C was a party to the decree According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section A's only remedy was by way of suit against C

Security for restitution of property taken in execution of a decree — A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain lands B appeals from the decree Pending the appeal A applies for execution of the decree The Court allows execution on C standing surety for the restitution of the lands to B in the event of the decree being reversed in appeal or for payment to B of the value of the property [O 41 r 6 Code of 1882 s 546] The decree is eventually reversed in appeal B may enforce the security by executing the appellate decree against C According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section B could only enforce the security by a separate suit (j)

Security for payment of money —The following are some of the sections and rules providing for security for the payment of money —

S 55 sub s (4) [security on behalf of a judgment debtor who is arrested in execution of a decree and who expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent]

O 25 r 1 [security for costs]

O 38 r 2 [security in cases of arrest before judgment]

O 38 r 5 [security in cases of attachment before judgment]

Security for fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person—The summary remedy provided by the old section applied only where the security given was for the performance of a decree and for no other purpose Thus where a defendant produced certain promissory notes in Court and the plaintiff objected to their return to the defendant but they were returned to the defendant on C standing surety for their production when required it was held that the plaintiff could not on non production of the notes proceed against C by execution the reason given being that the security was not given for the performance of a decree and that his only remedy was by way of suit against C (k) Under the present section the security may be enforced by execution against C Therefore when a sale in execution is adjourned on a security bond to produce the property attached the bond may on default be enforced against the surety for the value of the property by proceedings in execution (l)

The section applies only where the Court passes an order or decree which is intended to be an order or decree enforceable in execution by one party to a suit or other proceeding against the other party Therefore a bond passed by a surety under O 3 r 6 (2) cannot be enforced by summary process under this section it can only be enforced by a suit (m) Nor does the section apply to a surety on an administration bond under section 291 of the Indian Succession Act 19?? (n) See notes to O 21 r 43 Security bond for producing attached property

A is committed to prison in execution of a decree obtained against him by B A applies to be released from jail to enable him to make a petition in insolvency A is released from prison on C giving security that A will appear before the executing Court on the day fixed by the Court The insolvency petition fails and A fails to appear in Court In such a case B and not the Government is entitled to the security money (o) The money is to be appropriated towards satisfaction of the decree it is not to be given to the decree holder as a solatium or further benefit over and above the decretal amount (p)

To the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable — A surety (1) may render himself personally liable or he (2) may only give a charge upon his property or he (3) may undertake a personal liability and charge his property as further security

The provisions of this section apply to the first case the personal liability of the surety may be enforced by attachment and sale of his property In Amir v Mahadeo (q) Banerji J said Under sec 253 of Act XIV of 188? there was a conflict of opinion in the different High Courts as to whether a mortgage made by a surety could be enforced under that section It seems to me that in order to reconcile the divergency of opinion which arose under the old Code and to remove any ambiguity that might exist on the subject the Legislature in enacting section 145 of the present Code of Civil Procedure added the word personally to the provisions of that section thus clearly enacting that in execution of the decree it is the personal liability of the surety which could be enforced and not the liability of the property hypothecated by him As pointed out by the learned Chief Justice the enforcement of the mortgage created by the surety would require the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act as regards the array of parties and the form of the decree and other matters to be complied with

This section does not apply to the second case that is the property charged cannot be brought to sale under this section Where a surety charges his property by way of security the security may be given to the Court itself or to an officer of the Court or any other named individual Where the security is given to an officer of the Court or any other named individual the property cannot be sold except by a suit on the charge But where the security is given to the Court the Court not being a juridical person it cannot sue and the only mode of enforcing the liability is by the Court making an order in the suit upon an application to which the surety is a party that the property charged be sold unless before a day named the surety finds the money It was so held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Raghubar Singh v Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (r) In that case the plaintiff obtained a decree for possession against the defendant The defendant appealed from the decree The plaintiff was on his application led into possession in execution of the decree upon furnishing security The security was furnished by S who entered into a bond whereby he hypothecated the property The bond was passed to the Court No obligee was named in the bond It was argued on behalf of the surety that the liability in the bond could not be enforced except by a suit under O 34 r 14 (Transfer of Property Act 1882 s 90) but this argument was not accepted and it was held that the proper order to make was that the property charged be sold unless before a day named the surety found the money In that case their Lordships said In the course of the judgments in India section 145 was referred to but whatever might have been its effect if the sureties had been personally liable it has no application now that their Lordships have construed the instrument as giving only a charge upon property As to the contention that the liability could only be enforced by a suit on a mortgage their Lordships said that for such a proceeding there must be a mortgagor and a mortgagee but that there was no mortgagee named in the bond and further the Court not being a juridical person cannot assign the property to any person to enable him to file a suit on the mortgage It must however be observed that the procedure adopted by their Lordships in Raghubar Singh s case cannot be followed in cases where the surety has prior to the sale transferred his equity of redemption in the property to a third person (s)

In the third case also where the security is given to the Court the property may be sold by an order of the kind made in Raghubar Singh s case At the same time the applicant may relinquish his interest in the charge and proceed to enforce the personal liability in the bond by attachment and sale of the property charged (t)

Where a security bond charging his property is given by the judgment debtor himself the property can be realised in execution under sec 47 (u)

Notice to surety —The notice required to be given to a surety under this section is a condition precedent to the validity of an order for execution against him An attachment issued without such notice is illegal (v) When a decree is sent by the Court which passed the decree to another Court for execution the notice required by this section may be given by the latter Court (w) For form of notice see App H form No 13

Discharge of surety —The liability of the surety depends upon the terms of the bond and unless expressly limited to the original Court extends to the Court of appeal (x) The liability may be determined if the Court alters the terms of the security (y) A surety in pursuance of an order giving leave to defend a suit under O 37 is discharged when a consent decree is passed without his knowledge (z) Otherwise the surety is bound so long as the judgment debtor is bound and so the surety is not discharged by a payment which has not been certified under O 21 r 2 of the Code (a). The form which the contract of suretyship takes is immaterial it may be either in favour of the Court or of the decree holder (b)

Section no bar to a regular suit against surety —As to the old section it was held that it gave an additional not an exclusive remedy against a surety and that it did not prevent the decree holder from bringing a regular suit on the surety bond to enforce the security (c) The present section also does not bar a regular suit (d) It simply enables a party for whose benefit security has been given to enforce the surety bond against the surety by way of execution to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable and no more If the party for whose benefit security has been given proceeds against the surety in execution the surety is to be deemed for the purposes of appeal a party within the meaning of s 47 That is to say if an order is made in execution enforcing a claim against the surety the surety may appeal from the order as if he was a party to the suit in which the decree or order sought to be executed was passed (e) In this respect the section gives effect to certain rulings under the old section (f) The reference however to s 47 does not import into this section the provision therein contained which bars a separate suit A surety under this section is a party to the suit for the limited purpose mentioned in this section (g)

A surety for a deceased defendant is not liable when a decree is passed against a person who has not been adjudged to be the legal representative and he may bring a suit to negative his liability (h)

Appeal —An order under this section is appealable as a decree (i) See the penultimate paragraph of the section

Limitation —Where an appeal has been preferred from a decree for the performance whereof a person has become liable as a surety the period of limitation for an application under this section is 3 years from the date of the appellate decree as provided by art 182 cl (2) Schedule I of the Limitation Act and not 3 years from the date of the original decree (j)

Consent or agreement by persons under disability

Any person under disability —The section applies to consent given on behalf of persons under disability such as minors and lunatics See O 32 below

As to any proceeding —These words do not refer to the conduct of a suit or appeal A next friend or guardian ad litem has undoubtedly the conduct of a suit or appeal in his hands But if he does anything in the action beyond the mere conduct of it e g consents not to appeal the person under disability is not bound by it unless it is done with the express leave of the Court (m)

Express leave —The leave must be express In this respect the present section differs from the English rule the Bombay case it was held that it was competent to the Court to extend the time fixed under s 54 of the Code of 1882 (now O 7 r 11) even after the expiry of the time originally granted It must however be noted that the section applies only where time is fixed for the doing of an act prescribed or allowed by this Code. Code includes rule and prescribed means prescribed by the rules [see s 2 cls (1) and (16)]. See for instance the following rules —

1 O 6 r 18 (amendment of pleadings)
2 O 7 r 11 (b) (requiring plaintiff to correct valuation of suit)
3 O 7 r 11 (requiring plaintiff to supply requisite stamp paper where the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped)

6 O 25 r 2 (security for costs of suit)

Act directed or allowed by a decree of Court—This section does not apply where time is allowed for doing an act by a decree in a suit (p) It was accordingly held by the Allahabad High Court in Saranjan v Ram Bahal (q) that a Court has no power under this section to extend the time fixed by its decree under O 20 r 14 for payment of purchase money in a suit for pre emption The Allahabad decision has been approved by the Madras High Court (r) The High Court of Patna has however held that the Court has power under this section to extend the time fixed by a decree passed under O 20 r 14 (s) The attention of the Patna Court was not drawn to the Allahabad decision In a later case however the Allahabad High Court held that where an ex parte decree is set aside on condition that the defendant should pay a certain sum of money to the plaintiff within a certain time and payment is not made the Court has power under this section to enlarge the time for payment As to Saranjan's case the Court observed that it related to a decree in a suit for pre emption (t) In a still later case where a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff conditional upon her paying an extra court fee of Rs 20 within a week but the amount was not paid within that period the High Court of Allahabad held that the Court had no power under this section to extend the time but that the plaintiff might proceed by an application for a review under s 114 read with O 47 r 1 The Court said There is no distinction between a pre emption decree and any other decree which embodies certain conditions and provides for the suit being dismissed if those conditions are not complied with (u) The Patna High Court has held that where a Court permits the plaintiff to withdraw a suit under O 23 r 1 with liberty to bring a fresh suit on payment of costs within a prescribed period the Court has power under this section to extend the time (v) The Oudh Court while holding that this section does not allow enlargement of time where the time is fixed by a decree in a suit holds that if an appeal is preferred from the decree the Appellate Court may extend the time prescribed by the decree not under sec 148 but under O 41 r 33 by varying the decree of the lower Court in that behalf It has thus been held that if a decree is passed for pre emption on payment of a certain sum in Court within a prescribed time and an appeal is preferred from the decree the Appellate

Court has the power to extend the time for payment (w) The section does not in any case empower a Court to interfere with or modify its decree after an appeal has been filed from the decree (x) See note below Court to which etc

An application for extension of time fixed by the decree in a redemption suit for payment of the mortgage debts does not fall under this section but under O 34 r 8 (y)

Period of limitation —This section does not empower a Court to extend the period prescribed by the law of limitation ( ) nor the period of one month fixed by sec 95 (4) of the Code (a)

Consent order —Where the time for doing an act has been fixed by a consent order it cannot be enlarged except by consent (b)

Court to which application should be made for extension of time —Where a decree is passed against a defendant requiring him to execute a kabuliat in favour of the plaintiff within two months and an appeal is preferred from the decree the only Court that has power to extend the time assuming the case is one under this section is the appellate Court and not the Court which passed the decree (c)

Appeal —No appeal lies from an order under this section The order is not a decree nor is it one of the appealable orders mentioned in s 104 (d)

149 [New] Power to make up deficiency of court-fees. Where the whole or any part of any fee prescribed for any document by the law for the time being in force relating to court-fees has not been paid, the Court may, in its discretion, at any stage, allow the person, by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part as the case may be, of such court fee, and upon such payment the document, in respect of which such fee is payable, shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance

Scope of the section —This section is new It is an enabling section It empowers the Court to allow a party to make up the deficiency of court fees payable on plaints memoranda of appeal applications for review of judgment etc even after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the filing of these documents The section enables a defective document to be retrospectively validated if the insufficiency of the stamp is subsequently made up with the leave of the Court The power however to make up the deficiency of court fees is subject to the discretion of the Court and is not claimable as of right by a party (e) See notes below Appeals and applications for review of judgment

If a memorandum of appeal or application for a review of judgment has been presented within the proper period of limitation but is written upon paper insufficiently stamped and the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant as to the amount of the requisite stamp the memorandum of appeal or application shall have the same effect and be as valid as if it has been properly stamped provided that such appeal or application shall be rejected unless the appellant or applicant supplies the requisite stamp within a reasonable time after the discovery of the mistake to be fixed by the Court

The above section was introduced into the Code of 1882 by Act 4 of 1892 to supersede a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court That ruling was to the effect that if a memorandum of appeal is not when tendered properly stamped it is not at that time a memorandum of appeal and the subsequent affixing of the proper stamp cannot have a retrospective effect so as to validate the original presentation unless it has been done by order of the Court and that such an order can only be made where the defective memorandum has been received through a mistake on the part of the Court or its officers and not where the insufficiency of the stamp was due to a mistake on the part of the appellant (f)

S 582A applied only to appeals and applications for a review The present section is general in its terms and applies to all documents chargeable with court fees under the Court fees Act such as plaints memoranda of appeal or of cross objections applications for review of judgment written statements pleading a set off or counter claim

The words and the insufficiency of the stamp was caused by mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant as to the amount of the requisite stamp which occurred in s 582A have been omitted in the present section It has accordingly been held by the High Court of Bombay that the concession provided for by this section should not be restricted to cases where there is a bona fide misunderstanding of the law as to valuation as it was under s 582A and that inability on the part of the appellant to pay the requisite stamp is a good ground for admitting the memorandum of appeal though presented on the last day of limitation and for extending under this section the time to pay the requisite stamp (g) According to the Patna High Court the Court should not give time to make good the deficiency if a litigant has deliberately and to suit his own convenience paid an insufficient court fee Time according to that Court may be given when the amount of the court fee payable is open to doubt or the amount of the court fee cannot be ascertained by the Court till the record is received or if it appears that the party has made an honest attempt to comply with the law (h) The Lahore High Court has taken a similar view (i) and held that if the insufficiency of the court fee is due to gross negligence on the part of the appellant or his pleader the negligence cannot be condoned (j) The Allahabad High Court has held that where an insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal is accepted by inadvertence time may be given to the appellant to supply the deficiency but if the Court is aware ab initio of the insufficiency of the stamp it ought to return the memorandum to the appellant in order that he may if the case admits re present it properly stamped and apply for an extension of time under sec 5 of the Indian Limitation Act (k)

The present section as stated above applies to all documents chargeable with court fees such as plaints memoranda of appeal applications for review etc As regards plaints it is well settled that in the case of a plaint insufficiently stamped the Court is bound under O 7 r 11 (c) [s 54 of the Code of 1882] to give time to the plaintiff to make good the deficiency even if the plaintiff has deliberately and without any excuse paid an insufficient court fee provided the plaint is presented within the period of limitation As regards appeals however there is a difference of opinion The High Court of Bombay (l) has held that a memorandum of appeal stands on the same footing as a plaint and that as in the case of a plaint so in the case of a memorandum of appeal the Court is bound to give time to the appellant to make good the deficiency the reason given being that O 7 r 11 cl (c) is made applicable to appeals by s 107 (2) [s 582 of the Code of 1882] As to the present section the Court said in effect that it should be read subject to the provisions in the case of plaints of O 7 r 11 (c) and in the case of appeals of O 7 r 11 (c) coupled with s 107 (2) On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Patna (m) that the Court is not bound in the case of a memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped to give the appellant time to make good the deficiency but that it may allow time if the amount of the court fee payable is open to doubt or if the amount of the fee cannot be ascertained by the Court till the record is received or if it appears that the appellant has made an honest attempt to comply with the law but that it should not allow time if the appellant has deliberately and to suit his own convenience paid on his appeal insufficient court fee According to that Court the present section should not be construed in such a way as to nullify the express provisions of s 4 or s 6 of the Court Fees Act 7 of 1870 (n) A similar view has been taken by the Lahore High Court (o) The view taken by the High Court of Bombay has also been dissented from by the Madras High Court (p)

Revision—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that an order refusing to give time to a party to make up the deficiency in court fee is not capable of revision as such an order does not amount to a decision of a case within the meaning of s 115 of the Code (q)

Madras that it has O 9 r 13 does not say that the Court that passed the decree is the only Court that can set it aside (r)

Transferred —In two cases decided by the High Court of Madras it was held that the word transferred in this section is not confined to transfer of the business of one Court to another but includes cases where a new Court is given part of the territorial jurisdiction of an old Court and is authorized to try all the business arising within it (s) The High Court of Calcutta differs (t) and in a more recent case the Madras High Court has dissented from its two previous decisions and holds that the section refers to cases where certain specified business has been actually transferred by the order of a competent Court and does not apply to any other case (u)

See notes to s 37 above See also the undermentioned cases (v)

151 [New] Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court

Saving of inherent powers of Court

Inherent powers of Court —The Code of Civil Procedure is not exhaustive (w) The Court has therefore in many cases where the circumstances require it acted upon the assumption of the possession of an inherent power to act ex debito justitiae and to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone it exists (x) The law cannot make express provisions against all inconveniences so that their dispositions shall express all the cases that may possibly happen and it is therefore the duty of a Judge to apply them not only to what appears to be regulated by their express provisions but to all the cases to which a just application of them may be made and which appear to be comprehended either within the expre s sense of the law or within the consequences that may be gathered from it (y) This section does not confer any powers but only indicates that there is a power to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice and to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court (z) At the same time it is to be remembered that a Court has no inherent power to do that which is prohibited by the Code Thus a Court has no power after the judgment is signed to alter or add to it as to do so would be in direct contravention of the provisions of O 20 r 3 (a) Further this section does not invest the Court with jurisdiction over matters which are excluded from its cognizance Thus a Court cannot under this section entertain a suit relating purely to caste questions such a suit not being one of a civil nature (b) see s 9 above Nor can the Court ignore the provisions of the law of limitation by appealing to this section (c) Inherent jurisdiction must be exercised subject to the rule that if the Code does contain specific provisions which would meet the necessities of the case in question such provisions should be followed and the inherent jurisdiction should not be invoked (d) A Court cannot make use of the special provisions of this section where the applicant has his remedy provided elsewhere in the Code and has neglected to avail himself of it (e) And further no order should be made under this section unless it is necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court (f) The mere fact that there is no other remedy would not attract the application of this section (g) The first case in which this section was considered by the Privy Council is Sabitri v Savi (h) In that case the High Court of Calcutta dismissed an appeal under O 41 r 10 which provides that upon a failure to comply with an order for security for costs the Court shall dismiss the appeal On appeal to the Judicial Committee it was contended that the Court had inherent power under this section to give the appellant an opportunity of making an application for leave to continue the appeal in forma pauperis Referring to this contention their Lordships said A further point is taken that s 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 preserves the inherent powers of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice and to this general saving section appeal is made to take the case out of the operation of the orders and rules if they are applicable to Letters Patent appeals How far a mere general saving clause gives power in effect to refuse to apply an appropriate rule made in the exercise of other powers of the Court and having statutory force is another question but for present purposes it is enough to say that in the terms of the section the inherent powers saved are such as are used to secure the ends of justice In the end their Lordships came to the conclusion on the materials before them that justice did not require that the appellant should be assisted in prosecuting the appeal before the High Court and they confirmed the order of the High Court The Bombay High Court has said that the section should be applied with great caution and that a Court could not under this section restore an application under O 21 r 89 which had been dismissed for default of appearance (i) But where the ends of justice require it the Court has an inherent power to make such order as it may deem proper It has thus been held that although the Code contains no express provision on the matters hereinafter mentioned the Court has an inherent power—

Amendment of decrees and orders —This section has been taken from O 28 r 11 of the Rules of the Supreme Court

There are only two cases in which the Court can amend or vary a decre or order after it is drawn up and signed namely —

(i) under its inherent powers when the decree or order does not correctly state what the Court actually decided and intended and

(ii) under this section where there has been a clerical or arithmetical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission.

If a decree or order is sought to be amended or varied in any other case it can only be done by a review of judgment under O 47 r 1 or by an appeal under s 96 (u) It is doubtful whether a decree or order can be varied even by consent of parties after it is drawn up and signed (v) see O 20 r 3

Inherent power to amend decrees and orders—Every Court has an inherent power to vary or amend its own decree or order so as to carry out its own meaning In so doing it does nothing but exercise a power to correct a mistake of its ministerial officer by whom the decree or order was drawn up (w) it only insists that the decree drawn up in the office of the Court should correctly express the judgment given by the Court (x) It would be perfectly shocking if the Court could not rectify an error which is really the error of its own minister (y) I cannot doubt said Lord Penzance in Laurie v Lees (z) that under the original powers of the Court independent of any order that is made under the Judicature Act every Court has the power to vary its own orders which are drawn up mechanically in the office of the Court—to vary them in such a way as to carry out its own meaning and where language has been used which is doubtful to make it plain. I think that power is inherent in every Court In Hatton v Harris (a) Lord Watson said When an error of that kind has been committed it is always within the competency of the Court if nothing has intervened which would render it inexpedient or inequitable to do so to correct the record in order to bring it into harmony with the order which the Judge obviously meant to pronounce

It will be seen from the above that the Court has no power to vary or amend its decree where it is in conformity with the judgment (b) not even if the judgment is erroneous in law (c) though the error be apparent on the face of the judgment (d)

A decree has been defined in s 2 as the formal expression of an adjudication which completely determines the rights of the parties with regard to the matters in controversy in a suit O 20 r 6 provides that a decree shall be in conformity with the judgment Where a decree is at variance with the judgment the Court has power to set right the decree and to bring it into conformity with the judgment (e)

Accidental omission —This section enables the Court to correct errors arising from an accidental omission (f) Thus where directions as to costs were inadvertently omitted the decree was set right by adding the directions (g) Similarly where the date from which payments ordered to be made were to run was inadvertently omitted the decree was perfected by adding the date (h)

Accidental slip —The Court has power under this section to correct accidental slips (i) A bona fide error as to the amount of interest due to the defendant may be corrected under this section (j) And so also an error as to the period for which an injunction is to continue (k)

May —In a recent case the High Court of Calcutta said The word may in the section does not make it discretionary with the Court to order the amendment but merely enlarges the power of the Court by providing that such correction may be made at any time or in other words the section simply emphasizes that no lapse of time would disentitle the Court to make the correction (l) The correct view it is submitted is the one taken by the High Court of Allahabad namely that under this section there is no right in any party to have a clerical or arithmetical mistake corrected The matter is left to the discretion of the Court and the discretion has to be exercised in view of the peculiar facts of each case (m)

At any time —A decree may be amended under this section at any time although the time for appealing from the decree has expired (n) There is no limitation for an application to amend the decree (o) Under the corresponding English rule an error in a decree was in one case amended after 39 years (p) and in another case after 19 years (q) In a Bombay case an application was made to the High Court to rectify a decree in the exercise of its inherent powers 10 years after the date of the decree and the application was allowed (r) But no amendment should be allowed by the Court either under this section or in the exercise of its inherent powers if it is inexpedient or inequitable to do so as where third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous decree without a knowledge of the circumstances which would tend to show that the decree was erroneous (s) Further laches may in the particular circumstances of a case di entitle a party to relief under this section (t)

Amendment and limitation —An amendment of a merely clerical error does not furnish a fresh starting point of limitation for executing the decree (u)

By which Court amendment could be made —The Court to amend a decree is the Court that pas ed it Where an appeal is preferred from a decree of a Court of first instance the appellate Court may—

(1) di mi s the appeal under O 41 r 11 (1) without issuing any notice to the respondent or it may

(2) confirm reverse or vary the decree of the Court of first instance [O 41 r 32]

In case (1) it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta Madras Allahabad and Pangoon that it is the appellate Court alone that can amend the decree (v) On the other hand it has been held by the Bombay High Court that it is the Court of the first instance and not the appellate Court that can amend the decree the reason given being that a dismissal under O 41 r 11 leaves the decree of the lower Court untouched (w) See notes to s 36 above

In case (2) the appellate Court alone can amend the decree (x)

The Court which passed the decree has power to amend it even after an appeal is filed it is only when the appellate Court passes a decree which operates to supersede the decree of the trial Court that its power to amend ceases (y)

When an appeal is withdrawn the decree of the lower Court is left intact and that Court alone has power to amend ( )

An arithmetical error in the decree of the lower Court repeated in a confirming decree of the appellate Court may it is submitted be corrected by the appellate Court

Where an application for revision of a decree of a Provincial Small Cause Court is rejected by the High Court in limine the proper Court to amend the decree is the Small Cau e Court and not the High Court (a)

Revision —A deci ion under this section granting an application for amendment is an order and not a decree The decision may therefore be the subject of revi ion under s 115 but it cannot be the subject of an appeal (b) It has been so held by the High Courts of Calcutta Allahabad and Bombay in cases under the corresponding s 206 of the Code of 188_ A different view has b en taken by the High Court of Madras According to that Court where a decree is amended the aggrieved party has the right to appeal from the decree as amended Hence if no appeal is preferred within the period of limitation he cannot afterwards apply for a revi ion of the order allowing the amendment (c)

Where a case is one of accidental lip within the meaning of this section but the Court which passed the decree refuses to amend it on the ground that the case does not fall under this section the refusal amounts to a failure to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Court within the meaning of s 115 and the High Court has power to interfere in revision (d) Similarly where the lower Court amends a decree in a case in which according to its own view the amendment should be refused stating as a reason for the amendment that it was bound under this section to bring the decree into conformity with the judgment the High Court is entitled to interfere in revision under s 115 (c) of the Code (e)

Amendment when to be refused—Where the order as drawn up represents the real decision of the Court the Court has no jurisdiction to rehear or alter it (f) Even when the order has been obtained by fraud the Court has no jurisdiction to rehear it If such a jurisdiction existed it would be most mischievous (g)

Consent decree—Where a decree founded on a compromise does not embody the true terms of the compromise the only remedy is by an independent suit to set aside the decree either on the ground of mistake or fraud or some other ground ejusdem generis with it (h) See note to s 96 Procedure for setting aside consent decrees

Code of 1882 s 206—The third paragraph of s 206 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows —

If the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment or if any clerical or arithmetical error be found in the decree the Court shall of its own motion or on that of any of the parties amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment or to correct such error Provided that reasonable notice has been given to the parties or their pleaders of the proposed amendment

The above paragraph enabled the Court to amend its decree in the following two cases namely —

(1) Where the decree was at variance with the judgment and

(2) Where any clerical or arithmetical error was found in the decree

The present section corresponds with the second part of the above paragraph. The first part of the paragraph which empowers the Court to amend its decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment has been omitted An application to amend a decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment must now be made to the Court in the exercise of its inherent power This power has been saved by s 151

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order directing an amendment either under the Code (i) or under the Charter (j) In a case however where the whole method of calculation adopted by the first Court was challenged in the plaintiff's application which purported to be an application under s 152 and the first Court allowed the amendment it was held that the order allowing the amendment must be regarded as one made under O 47 and that the order was therefore appealable (k)

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that though no appeal lies from an order of amendment an appeal would lie from the amended decree (l)

153 [New R S C, O 28 r 12] The Court may at any time, and on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it may think fit, amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit, and all necessary amendments shall be made for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on such proceeding

General power to amend

R S C O 28 r 12—This section is new It is taken from the Rules of the Supreme Court O 28 r 12 The words in a suit after the word proceeding do not occur in the English rule

Scope of the section—O 6 r 17 is confined to amendments of pleadings and s 152 to correcting errors in judgments decrees or orders The present section confers a general power on the Court to amend defects and errors in any proceeding in a suit and to make all necessary amendments for the purpose of determining the real question at issue between the parties to the suit This power is vested in the original as well as the appellate Court (m) In Australian Steam Navigation Co v Smith and Sons (n) their Lordships of the Privy Council said Their Lordships are strong advocates for amendment whenever it can be done without injustice to the other side and even where they have been put to certain expense and delay yet if they can be compensated for that in any way it seems to their Lordships that an amendment ought to be allowed for the purpose of raising the real question between the parties

Any proceeding in a suit—The following are some of the cases under the corresponding English rule and the present rule —

Answers to interrogatories—Where it was admitted by the defendant a solicitor in answer to interrogatories that his partner had paid into the banking account of the firm money received by the latter for investment the defendant was allowed to amend the answer it being shown that the admission had been made by mistake (o) In another case where the defendant charged the plaintiff (his manager) with misconduct and the plaintiff exhibited interrogatories of which the substance was to ask the defendant to specify the acts of misconduct on which he relied it was said by Thesiger L J that if the defendant answered the interrogatories and it was subsequently discovered by him that there were other acts of misconduct on which he could rely there was nothing to prevent his being allowed to amend his answers to the interrogatories (p) See as to interrogatories O 11 rr 1 11 below

Particulars—An application to amend particulars if made a reasonable time before the trial will generally be allowed on terms (q) But leave to amend particulars when it is applied for at the trial will as a rule be refused (r)

Notice of motion—A notice of motion in an action for the rescission of an agreement for the sale of land was allowed to be amended at the hearing by asking for the appointment of a receiver (s)

Title of appeal—If an appeal is presented against a person who is dead at the date of presentation the Court may under this section permit the title of the appeal to be amended (t)

154 [S 3, third para] Nothing in this Code shall affect any present right of appeal which shall have accrued to any party at its commencement

Saving of present right of appeal

Any present right of appeal —There is a conflict of decisions as to the meaning of the words any present right of appeal which occur in this section According to the Chief Court of the Punjab the words any present right of appeal refer to a right which had actually come into existence at the commencement of this Code by virtue of the decree or order sought to be appealed from having been passed before this Code came into force (u) According to the Madras High Court those words refer to a right which had become vested in a litigant before this Code came into force (v) Thus there are cases in which a second appeal lay under the old Code from certain orders made in execution (the orders being treated as decrees) while no such appeal lies under the present Code According to the Chief Court of the Punjab no second appeal would lie in such a case from the order made in first appeal unless the latter order was made while the old Code was in force According to the Madras High Court a second appeal would lie if the first appeal from the order made by the Court of first instance was preferred when the old Code was in force though the order made in first appeal was not made until after the new Code came into force (w) Similarly there are cases in which an appeal was allowed from certain orders under the old Code from which no appeal is allowed under the present Code According to the Chief Court of the Punjab no appeal would lie from the order in such a case unless the order was made when the old Code was in force (x) According to the Madras High Court it would seem that an appeal would lie if the suit in which the order was made was instituted when the old Code was in force See s 96 sub s (3) and ss 97 and 104 See also notes to s 1

THE FIRST SCHEDULE

ORDER I

Parties to Suits

1 [S 26, R S C, O 16, r 1] All persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, if such persons brought separate suits any common question of law or fact would arise

Who may be joined as plaintiffs

Scope of the Order—This order deals with joinder of parties and to a certain extent with joinder of causes of action (y) O 2 r 3 deals exclusively with joinder of causes of action Rule 4 of this Order is to be read with rule 1

General rules—Before considering the present rule it may be as well to note the general rules relating to the joinder of parties and of causes of action According to the Code the essentials of a suit are—(1) opposing parties (2) a subject in dispute (3) a cause of action and (4) a demand of relief (z) [see O 7 r 1] All these essentials must concur in every suit properly framed Order 1 deals with the joinder of parties Order 2 deals with the frame of suits In framing a suit the following three kinds of misjoinder must be guarded against —

(i) Misjoinder of plaintiffs—Where there are more plaintiffs than one the provisions of the present rule apply This rule relates to the joinder of plaintiffs It provides in effect that two or more persons may be joined as plaintiffs in one suit if the right to relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or of fact If not they cannot be joined as plaintiffs in one suit and they must bring separate suits If two or more persons are joined as plaintiff in one suit in a case not covered by O 1 r 1 the result is a misjoinder of plaintiffs The objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity if not it will be deemed to have been waived [O 1 r 13] Where such objection is taken and the Court finds that it is well founded the Court should not dismiss the suit [O 1 r 9] but the plaint may be amended [O 6 r 17] by striking out the names of such persons as have been improperly joined as plaintiffs [O 1 r 10 sub r (2)] and the suit may then be proceeded with [O 1 r 9] In other words an objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiff is not fatal to the suit (a)

(ii) Misjoinder of defendants—Where there are more defendants than one the provisions of rule 3 of this Order apply That rule relates to the joinder of defendants It provides in effect that two or more persons may be joined as defendants in one suit if the right to relief alleged to exist against each of them arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or of fact If not they cannot be joined as defendants in one suit and separate suits must be brought against them If two or more persons are joined as defendants in one suit in a case not covered by O 1 r 3 the result is a misjoinder of defendants As in the case of plaintiffs so in the case of defendants the objection on the ground of misjoinder should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity if not it will be deemed to have been waived (O 1 r 13) Where such objection is taken and the Court finds that it is well founded the Court should not dismiss the suit (O 1 r 9) but the plaint may be amended (O 6 r 17) by striking out the names of such persons as have not been properly joined as defendant [O 1 r 10 sub r (2)] and the suit may then be proceeded with (O 1 r 9) In other words an objection on the ground of misjoinder of defendants is not fatal to the suit

(iii) Misjoinder of causes of action—As to the meaning of cause of action see notes to 20 under the head Cause of action A misjoinder of causes of action may be coupled with a misjoinder of plaintiffs or it may be coupled with a misjoinder of defendant There may again be a misjoinder of claim founded on several causes of action Accordingly this subject may be considered under the following three heads —

(a) Misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action—Where in a suit there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action the plaintiffs should be jointly interested in all the causes of action If the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in all the causes of action the case is one of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action O 2 r 3 read with O 1 r 1 forbids such a misjoinder The objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity (O 2 r) As to the procedure to be followed in the case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action see notes to O 2 r 3 Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiff and causes of action See also s 99 above

(b) Misjoinder of defendants and causes of action Multifariousness—Where in a suit there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action the suit will be bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action if different causes of action are joined against different defendants separately (O 2 r 3 and O 1 r 3) Such a misjoinder is technically called multifariousness The objection on the ground of multifariousness should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity (O 2 r 7) As to the procedure to be followed in the case of multifariousness see notes to O 2 r 3 Procedure in case of multifariousness See also s 99 above

(c) Misjoinder of claims founded on several causes of action—See O 2 rr 4 5

Non joinder of parties—Where a person who is a necessary party to a suit is not joined as a party to the suit the case is one of non joinder A suit should not be dismissed on the ground of non joinder (b) The objection for non joinder should be taken before the first hearing (O 1 r 13) and the plaint may be amended by adding the omitted party either as plaintiff or as defendant bearing in mind that no person can be added as a plaintiff though he may be added as a defendant without his consent (b) See notes to O 1 rr 9 and 13

Relation of this rule to O 2 r 3—O 2 r 3 is to be read subject to the provisions of this rule (c)

Changes effected in the law—Before considering O 1 r 1 in detail it should be noted that under the corresponding s 26 of the Code of 1882 all persons could be joined in one suit as plaintiffs provided that the right to relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff arose from the same cause of action The present rule is much wider It is a production almost verbatim of O 16 r 1 of the English rules It enables several plaintiffs though they have separate causes of action to join in one suit if—

(b) Mphabala v Kunha a (1898) 21 Mad 3 3 | (c) Ramendra Nath v Brajendra Nath (1918) 45 Cal 111 41 I.C 944

(1) the right to relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff arises out of the same act or transaction and

(2) there is a common question of law or fact

The expression act or transaction used in this rule is more comprehensive than the expression cause of action used in the old section for the same act or transaction may give rise to different causes of action as when several persons are injured by the same act of negligence on the part of a railway company Under the old section such persons could not join as plaintiffs in one suit the causes of action being different Under the present rule it seems they can as the right to relief arises out of the same act

The old section—The corresponding s 26 of the Code of 1882 was as follows —

All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist whether jointly severally or in the alternative in respect of the same cause of action

The decisions on the meaning of cause of action in the old section were not uniform In some cases it was held that the expression cause of action meant facts constituting the infringement of a right plus facts constituting the right itself (d) while in others it was held that it referred to facts constituting the infringement of the right but not necessarily also those constituting the right (e)

The following are some of the cases decided under the old section It was held in those cases that the plaintiffs could not all join in one suit and that they should bring separate suits Under the present rule it is submitted the plaintiffs may in each one of the following cases all join in one suit —

1 In Aldridge v Barrow (f) the defendant the editor and proprietor of a newspaper published articles which referred to the Calcutta Police without naming individuals The plaintiffs six of the members of the Calcutta Police Force jointly sued the editor for damages alleging that the articles were directed against them and that they constituted a libel Here the libel was in the same words and in the same documents but of different persons It was held that the plaintiffs could not all be joined in one suit. The Court said It is true that the injury may have been caused by one act of the defendant as for instance in the case of a railway accident causing injury to several passengers or as is here alleged, of a collective libel on several individuals The cause of action of the persons injured will none the less remain separate and distinct. There cannot in such cases be said to be one or the same cause of action

2 In Pajjo Kuar v Debi Dial (g) several creditors to each of whom separate debts were owing by the same debtor jointly sued the debtor to avoid a deed of gift executed by the debtor in favour of his daughter on the ground that it was made fraudulently with intent to defeat their claims The Court held that they could not join as plaintiffs in one suit on the ground that the causes of action were separate and distinct Such a suit could now be properly brought by one or more creditors on behalf of themselves and others under O 1 r 8

3 In Tarajlal v Ramdat (h) A and B were assaulted by C at an interview in C's house A and B jointly sued C for damages for assault It was held that the assaults on A and that on B constituted two distinct causes of action and the suit was therefore bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs The Court said We may go further and say that as the blows on each plaintiff were inflicted at the same time and place and must be proved by the same evidence it would be more convenient if the law permitted the trial of the two suits together than that it should be necessary to try them separately But this is a matter for the consideration of the Legislature

4 In Ali Serang v Beadon (i) thirteen firemen who were engaged on board a steamer were all arrested under one warrant on a charge of desertion and they were all tried together and sentenced to one month's imprisonment The term of imprisonment expired on 5th May but they were not released on that date Thereupon all the thirteen brought a suit against the superintendent of the jail for damages for wrongful detention It was held that the causes of action were distinct and separate and could not be joined in one suit

5 In Ramanuja v Devanayaka (j) several trustees of a temple were removed from the office of trustees by the District Temple Committee A suit by the trustees for a declaration that their removal was without just cause was held to be bad for misjoinder on the ground that the dismissal of each trustee gave rise to a distinct cause of action.

The new Rule —In all the cases cited above it was held that the plaintiffs having distinct causes of action they could not join in one suit and that the proper course for them was to bring separate suits The present rule covers such cases and allows the plaintiffs to join in one suit (k) Under the present rule several persons may join as plaintiffs in one suit though their causes of action be separate and distinct provided that—

(1) the right to relief alleged to exist in them arises out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions and

(2) the case is of such a character that if such persons brought separate suits any common question of law or fact would arise

Both these conditions must be fulfilled to enable two or more persons to join as plaintiffs in one suit The two conditions are not alternative (l)

The illustrations given above are all English cases decided under the new English rule 1 of Order 16 That rule came into operation on the 26th of October 1896 The present rule is in the main a reproduction of the English rule The old English rule corresponded with s 26 of the Code of 1882 except that the words in respect of the same cause of action did not occur in that rule But though those words did not occur in that rule it was held that two or more persons could not join as plaintiffs in one suit unless the cause of action was the same Thus in Smurthwaite v Hannay (q) it was held by the House of Lords that several shippers of different shipments of cotton on the same ship for the same voyage could not jointly sue the shipowner for damages for short delivery the causes of action being distinct and separate. For the same reason it was held that persons injured by the same act of negligence could not join in one action as plaintiffs for damages against the wrong doer (r) But since the test under the new English rule as well as the present Indian rule is no longer the identity of the cause of action but the identity of the act or transaction such a joinder of plaintiffs would now be perfectly legitimate both in England and India (s) In Thomas v Moore (t) Pickford L J said Whatever the law may have been at the time when Smurthwaite v Hannay was decided joinder of parties and joinder of causes of action are discretionary in this sense that if they are joined, there is no absolute right to have them struck out but it is discretionary in the Court to do so if it thinks right

Plaintiffs having different interests—Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions as to whether where the plaintiffs were entitled to different interests in a property they could join in one suit to recover possession of the property from a third party if the ground on which the relief was claimed was common to all the plaintiffs According to the Allahabad decisions they could not (u) according to the Madras and Calcutta decisions they could (v) Under the present rule there is no doubt that such persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs

A succeeds to B s estate by inheritance and assigns a portion thereof to C D is in possession of the estate and disputes A s right of succession to it A and C may under the present rule jointly sue D for recovery of possession of the portions of the estate to which they are entitled as their claims in respect thereof are based on a common ground It doe not matter that A claims by right of inheritance and C under an assignment from A Both the conditions required by the rule are present in the case

Further having regard to the comprehensive language of this rule plaintiffs may sue in a double capacity if the conditions prescribed by this rule are complied with Thus where plaintiffs were trustees of a house part of which was let out by them and the rest occupied by them as tenants and they sued both as trustees and tenants for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing a nuisance it was held that there was no objection to their suing as trustees to protect the reversion and as tenants to enjoy the property free from the nuisance (w) See notes below Jointly

Any right to relief —The words any right to relief are wider than the words the right to any relief which occurred in the old section (x)

Severally —Where a right to relief in respect of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist in two or more persons severally they may join as plaintiffs in one suit or they may at their option bring separate suits The rule does not necessitate one suit A Hindu priest rai es a masonry structure upon a certain platform round a sacred tree on which every member of the community has an individual right to perform religious rite Here every member of the community has individually a cause of action and any one member may therefore sue the priest for the removal of the structure But it is not neces ary that all the members should join as plaintiffs in one suit They may so join if they choose but the law does not say that they should all so join (y) The same rule applies when two or more persons are entitled to the same relief in the alternative see notes below under the head in the alternative The rule however is different when two or more persons are jointly entitled to the same relief in respect of a transaction

Jointly —Where two or more persons are jointly entitled to the ame relief in respect of a transaction they must all join as plaintiffs in one suit Thus if A B and C are joint owners of a property they must all be joined as plaintiffs in a suit to recover the property (z) So in a suit to recover joint family property all the members of the joint family mu t as a general rule be joined as plaintiffs (a) In a suit to recover trust property all the trustees must join as plaintiffs (b) In a suit to recover the estate of a deceased person all the executors who have proved the will of the deceased must be joined as plaintiffs (c) If any one of them does not consent to join as plaintiff he may be joined as a defendant [r 10 sub r (2)] The proper course is first to a k him to join as plaintiff and if he refuses to join him as defendant But the suit should not be dismi sed merely because he is joined as defendant without being first called upon to join as plaintiff (d)

lands belong to him If the window does not dispute the adoption a suit may be brought by her and the adopted son as co plaintiffs against the brother to recover the property from him for the plaintiffs are jointly interested in disproving the defendant s title (e) But what if the adoption is not admitted by the widow and she asks the Court to decide the question of adoption as between her and the adopted son and prays that if the adoption is proved the property may be delivered to the adopted son or if not proved to herself? In such a case it has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit by the widow and the adopted son as co plaintiffs to recover the property from the brother is defective on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs for the plaintiffs having antagonistic claims it cannot be said that the right to relief exists jointly in them (f)

In the alternative —If in the case put above the adoption is disputed not by the widow but by the brother a suit may be brought by the widow and the adopted son as co plaintiffs against the brother claiming in the alternative to recover the property for the widow if the adoption is not valid or for the adopted son if the adoption is valid (g) Here there is no misjoinder of plaintiffs for the validity of the adoption is not disputed by the co plaintiff as in the preceding case but by the defendant See O 1 r 4 (a) below

Power of Court to order separate trials

2 [New R S C, O 16, r 1] Where it appears to the Court that any joinder of plaintiffs may embarrass or delay the trial of the suit, the Court may put the plaintiffs to their election or order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient

This rule refers to a suit brought by several plaintiffs in respect of the same act or transaction but the causes of action are o distinct that it is not convenient to di po e of them at one trial (h) The Court may put the plaintiffs to their election as to which of them will proceed with the suit or may order separate trials or may make such other order as may be expedient A suit by several creditors joining as co plaintiffs in a creditor s action or a suit by several market gardeners claiming certain preferential rights as to stands in the market is not a suit where the joinder could embarrass or delay the trial (i) Where plaintiff sued for possession of several properties some in his personal capacity and some as shebait of an idol the Calcutta High Court ordered the plaint to be treated as comprising two suits (j)

acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally O or in the alternative, where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise

Misjoinder of defendants—This rule is the converse of rule 1 It deals with joinder of defendants See notes to O 1 r 1 Misjoinder of defendants Rule 4 of this Order is to be read with this rule

Relation of this rule to O 2 r 3—O 2 r 3 is to be read subject to the provisions of this rule (k)

Jurisdiction—This rule contains a provision as to joinder of parties It assumes the existence of a suit in a proper forum the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit If the Court has such jurisdiction then this rule may come into play Hence if in a suit brought against two defendants A and B the Court has jurisdiction against A but none against B this rule does not confer jurisdiction upon the Court to try the suit against B also merely because the conditions of this rule are satisfied (l)

All persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist whether jointly severally or in the alternative in respect of the same matter

In some cases under that section it was said that the expression same matter was equivalent to same cause of action in others that it was equivalent to same act or transaction

New Rule—Under the present rule all persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise A plaintiff is entitled under this rule to join several defendants in respect of several and distinct causes of action subject to the discretion of the Court to strike out one or more of the defendants on the analogy of O 1 r 2 if it thinks it right to do so (m) Whatever the law may have been at the time when Smurthwaite v Hannay (n) was decided joinder of parties and joinders of causes of action are discretionary in this sense that if they are joined there is no absolute right to have them struck out but it is discretionary in the Court to do so if it thinks right (o) As a general rule where claims against different parties involve or may involve a common question of fact bearing sufficient importance in proportion to the rest of the action to render it desirable that the whole of the matters be disposed of at the same time the Court will allow the joinder of defendants subject to its discretion as to how the action should be tried (p) [see ill (3) below] See notes to O 2 r 3 Joinder of defendants and causes of action

6 A sues B C D E and F for the recovery of certain documents of title and the goods covered thereby and in the alternative for damages It is alleged in the plaint that the goods belonged to A that B obtained from A the documents of title relating thereto by fraud and made them over to C that C knowing that B had no title either to the documents or to the goods wrongfully dealt with them and sold the goods to D and E that D and F wrongfully claimed to retain the goods and the documents of title and, lastly that one of the documents of title namely a railway receipt was pledged by B to F though the goods covered by it were in the possession of D The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action (y) The foundation of the case on which the rest of it depends is the alleged fraud of B If such fraud is proved the question is did the defendants who all claim under B obtain any title ? If the plaintiff fails to prove fraud on the part of B the case fails against all the defendants If he proves fraud it may be that the defendants may have a different answer by way of defence but that does not make the case any the less one of a common question of law and fact The same act or transaction which concerns all the parties is the alleged fraud of B and this involves a common question of law or fact All defendants have derived title from a person who is alleged to have obtained the goods by means of fraud By reason of this the possession of all is alleged to be wrongful should it however be convenient the Court may [Umabai v Vithal ( )] direct the successive trial of the issues separately affecting different defendants The question of the alleged fraud of B touching all the defendants may be tried first If it fails there is an end of the case (a).

Costs where relief is claimed against defendants in the alternative—Where a suit is brought by A against B and C in the alternative and a decree is passed against B with costs but the suit as against C is dismissed the Court has jurisdiction in a proper case to order B (the unsuccessful defendant) to pay in addition to the costs payable by him to A (the plaintiff) the costs of C (the successful defendant) The rule has thus been stated by Vaughan Williams L J The proper way is—do not join any defendant unreasonably if the facts are such that it is reasonable to join them both and reasonable to be in a state of uncertainty as to which of the two is the really guilty one then it is part of the reasonable costs of the action that the costs of the action which you have launched against one of those defendants and who has succeeded in defending himself should be borne by the man who is to blame (l) In Child v Stenning (m)

Appeal —An appeal lies under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order refusing to allow the plaintiff to proceed in one suit against several defendants on the ground of misjoinder and requiring the plaintiff to elect against which of the defendants he will proceed Such an order is a judgment within the meaning of cl 15 for it is in substance a decision that the suit does not lie as framed with the result that if the plaintiff insists the suit must be dismissed (p)

Court may give judgment for or against one or more of joint parties

4 [Ss 26, 28] Judgment may be given without any amendment—

(a) for such one or more of the plaintiffs as may be found to be entitled to relief, for such relief as he or they may be entitled to ,

(b) against such one or more of the defendants as may be found to be liable, according to their respective liabilities

Cl (a) of this rule is to be read with r 1 above and cl (b) with r 3 above (q)

5 [New R S C O 16, r 5] It shall not be necessary that every defendant shall be interested as to all the relief claimed in any suit against him

This rule is to be read with r 3 above It provides in effect that where a suit is brought against several defendants the fact that every defendant is not interested in all the relief claimed in the suit does not imply misjoinder of defendants See notes to r 3 above

Several liability on a contract—This rule is confined to suits on contracts The liability on a contract may be either (1) several or (2) joint and several or (3) joint A and B each for himself agrees to pay Rs 5 000 to C Here A and B are severally liable on the contract C may therefore bring one suit against A and B or he may bring a separate suit against A and a separate suit against B These suits may be brought simultaneously or they may be brought successively one after the other But if the suit is brought against A and a decree is obtained against him and the decree is satisfied C cannot subsequently sue B on the contract But if the decree remains unsatisfied C is not precluded from suing B

Joint and several liability on a contract—The legal consequences of a joint and several liability on a contract are the same as those of several liability Thus if A and B pass a bond to C for Rs 5 000 and the bond provides that A and B shall jointly and severally pay the amount to C C may sue A and B jointly or he may sue them separately as in the case where the liability is several

Joint liability on a contract—The present rule does not provide for the case of a joint liability arising on a contract or negotiable instrument The reason is that so far as liability on a contract is concerned s 43 of the Indian Contract Act 1872 makes all joint contracts joint and several It allows a promisee to sue one or more of several joint promisors as he chooses and excludes the right of a joint promisor to be sued along with his co promisors (r) A partnership firm consisting of two persons A and B purchases from C goods worth Rs 5 000 The liability of partners is joint and A and B are therefore jointly liable to pay the price to C But under s 43 of the Contract Act C may sue either A or B at his option It is not incumbent upon C to join both A and B defendants If C sues A alone and a decree is passed against A he cannot according to English law afterwards sue B even though the decree against A remain unsatisfied The reason is that there is in the case of a joint contract a single cause of action which can only be sued on once The same view has been taken by the High Courts of Calcutta Madras and Bombay On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the effect of s 43 of the Indian Contract Act 1872 is to make all joint contracts joint and several Therefore where C obtained a judgment against A upon a joint bond executed by A and B and afterwards as the judgment was not satisfied sued B for the same money the Allahabad Court held that the suit against B was not barred. See Pollock and Mulla s Indian Contract Act notes to s 43 Effect of decree against some only of joint promisors

It may be added here that if in the case put above C sues A alone A may apply under O 1 r 10 (2) to have B joined as a defendant and the Court may make such order as it thinks proper In England it has been held that in an action on a joint con tract against one only of the joint contractors the Court has jurisdiction without obtain ing the consent of the plaintiff to make an order requiring the plaintiff to add the other joint contractor as a co defendant and that where the defendant has set up a reason able case of joint contract he has in the absence of special circumstances negativing it a prima facie right to an order requiring the plaintiff to add the other contractor as co defendant (s)

Parties to bills of exchange—A draws a bill of exchange upon B payable to C or order The bill is accepted by B C then endorses the bill to D D endorses it to E and E to F If the bill while in the hands of F is dishonoured, F may at his option sue A (the drawer) or B (the acceptor) or C (the endorser) or D (the endorser) or E (the endorser) or F may bring one action against all or any of them (t)

When plaintiff in doubt from whom redress is to be sought

Scope of the rule —This rule applies only where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress It does not enable a plaintiff to join separate causes of action against different defendants in one action in a case where he could not do so under r 3 above (u) Thus if damage is caused to A s house and he is in doubt as to whether it was caused by excavation works carried on by a County Council or by Water Company allowing water from its mains to weaken the soil in front of the house A cannot join the Council and the Company in one action for these are two distinct torts It does not matter that the resulting damage is the same in each case for it is not the damage that constitutes the cause of action but the injuria or the wrong done by a tort feasor (v) In such a case the present rule does not apply The following however is a case to which the rule has been held to apply M purporting to act as agent for C enters into a charter party with B for loading B s vessel with a cargo The cargo is not loaded and B sues M for damages alleging that M had no authority to enter into the charter party as agent for C Subsequently B finds upon discovery of documents that it is probable that C did give authority to M to bind him [C] with the charter party and applies to add C as a defendant The case is one within this rule and C may be added as a defendant (w)

Object of the rule —This rule is an exception to the general rule that all persons interested in a suit ought to be made parties thereto (x) Convenience requires that in suits where there is a community of interest amongst a large number of persons a few should be allowed to represent the whole (y) so that trouble and expense may be saved (z)

Application of the rule —The provisions of this rule apply only if (1) the parties are numerous (2) they have the same interest and (3) the necessary permission is obtained and notice given

Representative suit —A suit filed by one or more persons under this rule on behalf of themselves and others having the same interest in the suit is called a representative suit. The provisions of Explanation VI to s 11 [res judicata] apply to such a suit But that Explanation is not controlled by O I r 8 and if the Court allows a suit to proceed in a representative capacity for the benefit of numerous parties all those parties will be bound by the decree although the procedure prescribed by the rule was not followed (a) See notes below Decree in a representative suit

Numerous parties —Fluctuating body —Thirty defendants were held to be numerous (b) The High Court of Madras has held that a suit cannot be brought under this rule on behalf of the general public (c) Following this decision the High Court of Calcutta held in one case that this rule did not apply unless the parties were capable of being ascertained and a suit could not therefore be brought under this rule on behalf of the Hindu community as the whole Hindu community is incapable of ascertainment (d) This decision has been dissented from by the same High Court in later cases where it was held that it was not necessary to the application of this rule that the parties should be capable of being ascertained (e) In this connection it may be observed that property may be owned by a fluctuating body of persons like the inhabitants of a village (f) or the Dhobi community of Naraında (g) and a suit may be brought on their behalf under this rule It has also been held that a person may render himself liable to a community like the Vysia community of Mogarala by agreeing to pay a certain sum of money to it and a suit to recover it may be brought by the community in the name of one or more members of the community under this rule (h)

Same interest —It is essential that the parties should have the same interest in the suit Thus where there are numerous legatees under a will any one legatee may sue the executors on behalf of himself and the other legatees for a discovery of the estate of the deceased come into their hands as they have all the same interest in having the will proved (i) Similarly where a person dies leaving numerous creditors any one creditor may sue on behalf of himself and the other creditors as they all have the same interest in representing the estate of the deceased to be as large as possible (j) On the same principle of the community of interest any one rayat of a village may sue the proprietor of the village for himself and the other rayats for a declaration of their general rights against the proprietor (k) Similarly a villager may bring a suit on behalf of himself and his fellow villagers for a declaration of a right of way and for an injunction against the defendant for obstructing the way (l) Likewise any one tax payer may

7 [Neu R S C, O 16, r 7] Where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress, he may join two or more defendants in order that the question as to which of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined as between all parties

Scope of the rule—This rule applies only where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress It does not enable a plaintiff to join separate causes of action against different defendants in one action in a case where he could not do so under r 3 above (u) Thus if damage is caused to A s house and he is in doubt as to whether it was caused by excavation works carried on by a County Council or by Water Company allowing water from its mains to weaken the soil in front of the house A cannot join the Council and the Company in one action for these are two distinct torts It does not matter that the resulting damage is the same in each case for it is not the damage that constitutes the cause of action but the injuria or the wrong done by a tort feasor (v) In such a case the present rule does not apply The following however is a case to which the rule has been held to apply M purporting to act as agent for C enters into a charter party with B for loading B s vessel with a cargo The cargo is not loaded and B sues M for damages alleging that M had no authority to enter into the charter party as agent for C Subsequently B finds upon discovery of documents that it is probable that C did give authority to M to bind him [C] with the charter party and applies to add C as a defendant The case is one within this rule and C may be added as a defendant (w)

Costs where relief is claimed against defendants in the alternative—See notes to O 1 r 3 under the same head

8 [S 30 S 32, fourth para Cf R S C, O 16, r 9] (1) Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued, or may defend, in such suit, on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested But the Court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons either by personal service or, where from the number of persons or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable, by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct

One person may sue or defend on behalf of all in same interest

(2) Any person on whose behalf or for whose benefit a suit is instituted or defended under sub rule (1) may apply to the Court to be made a party to such suit

Object of the rule —This rule is an exception to the general rule that all persons interested in a suit ought to be made parties thereto (x) Convenience requires that in suits where there is a community of interest amongst a large number of persons a few should be allowed to represent the whole (y) so that trouble and expense may be saved( )

Application of the rule —The provisions of this rule apply only if (1) the parties are numerous (2) they have the same interest and (3) the necessary permission is obtained and notice given

Representative suit —A suit filed by one or more persons under this rule on behalf of themselves and others having the same interest in the suit is called a representative suit. The provisions of Explanation VI to s 11 [res judicata] apply to such a suit But that Explanation is not controlled by O 1 r 8 and if the Court allows a suit to proceed in a representative capacity for the benefit of numerous parties all those parties will be bound by the decree although the procedure prescribed by the rule was not followed (a) See notes below Decree in a representative suit

Numerous parties —Fluctuating body —Thirty defendants were held to be numerous (b) The High Court of Madras has held that a suit cannot be brought under this rule on behalf of the general public (c) Following this decision the High Court of Calcutta held in one case that this rule did not apply unless the parties were capable of being ascertained and a suit could not therefore be brought under this rule on behalf of the Hindu community as the whole Hindu community is incapable of ascertainment (d) This decision has been dissented from by the same High Court in later cases where it was held that it was not necessary to the application of this rule that the parties should be capable of being ascertained (e) In this connection it may be observed that property may be owned by a fluctuating body of persons like the inhabitants of a village (f) or the Dhobi community of Naraında (g) and a suit may be brought on their behalf under this rule It has also been held that a person may render himself liable to a community like the Vysia community of Mogarala by agreeing to pay a certain sum of money to it and a suit to recover it may be brought by the community in the name of one or more members of the community under this rule (h)

Same interest. —It is essential that the parties should have the same interest in the suit Thus where there are numerous legatees under a will any one legatee may sue the executors on behalf of himself and the other legatees for a discovery of the estate of the deceased come into their hands as they have all the same interest in having the will proved (i) Similarly where a person dies leaving numerous creditors any one creditor may sue on behalf of himself and the other creditors as they all have the same interest in representing the estate of the deceased to be as large as possible (j) On the same principle of the community of interest any one rayat of a village may sue the proprietor of the village for himself and the other rayats for a declaration of their general rights against the proprietor (k) Similarly a villager may bring a suit on behalf of himself and his fellow villagers for a declaration of a right of way and for an injunction against the defendant for obstructing the way (l) Likewise any one tax payer may bring a suit against a Municipality on behalf of himself and the other tax payers to restrain the Municipality from misapplying its funds (m)

In Templeton v Russell (n) a case under the corresponding English rule it was held that the rule applies only to persons who have or claim some beneficial proprietary right which they are asserting or defending in the suit But this meaning of the word interest was disapproved by the House of Lords in Bedford (Duke of) v Ellis (o) In the last mentioned case Lord Macnaghten said It seems to me that there is no reason whatever for so restricting the rule Given a common interest and a common grievance a representative suit was in order if the relief sought was in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposed to represent To limit the rule to persons having a beneficial proprietary interest would be opposed to precedent and not I think in accordance with common sense Take the case of a creditor s suit which perhaps was the earliest instance of plaintiffs being allowed to sue in a representative character It can hardly be suggested that a creditor has a proprietary interest in the real or personal estate of his deceased debtor Thus the disciples of a mutt have sufficient interest within the meaning of this rule to maintain a representative suit to declare alienations made by the Mahant invalid and to have the property alienated handed over to the Mahant for the time being (p) Similarly worshippers of a temple have sufficient interest to maintain a representative suit for a declaration that a permanent lease of temple property granted to the defendants in possession is invalid (q) or for recovering temple property from a trespasser (r)

The expression same interest must be distinguished from the expression same transaction What is required under this rule is that the parties should have the same interest it is not sufficient that their interests arise from the same transaction Therefore where goods of several persons are shipped under separate bills of lading the mere fact that the goods of all the persons are lost by the same cause does not entitle any one or more of them to bring a representative suit on behalf of themselves and others against the owner of the ship (s) But they may all join in one suit under O 1 r 1

When the meeting of a caste at which plaintiff was appointed to file a suit was irregularly convened and numerous members of the caste were opposed to the suit O 1 r 8 was held not to be applicable (t) But if the plaintiffs have been validly appointed to represent the community the fact that some members of the community subsequently side with the defendant will not affect the representative character of the suit under this rule (u)

Different interests —Where the parties have not the same interest they must all be on the record. Thus in a partition suit all co parceners must be brought before the Court (v) Similarly in a suit for contribution brought by a promisor all the co promisors bound to contribute must be brought before the Court (w) Numerous persons interested in equity of redemption should all be joined as party defendants (x)

Clubs and other associations —The secretary of a club or other association cannot sue alone in respect of a matter in which the association is interested even if he is authorised so to do by a resolution of the members of the association The suit must be brought by all the members of the association or by the secretary on his own behalf and on behalf of the other members under this rule (y) So if the treasurer of an association misappropriates the funds of the association no one member can sue alone to recover the amount misappropriated though he may be authorised so to do by a resolution of the association The suit must be brought by all the members or by any one member on his own behalf and on behalf of the other members ( ) The secretary of a club cannot unless he has expressly accepted a personal liability be sued personally on a contract entered into by him on behalf of the club nor can the members of a club collectively be sued through the secretary (a) The same remarks apply to an unregistered company (b) A suit to eject tenants from property belonging to the caste cannot be brought by the president of the managing committee of the caste though he may be authorised to do so by a resolution of the committee The suit must be brought by him on behalf of all the members of the caste (c) But no suit can be brought under this rule at all if the caste or association is divided into two parties one party being for the suit and the other against it In such a case it cannot be said that on behalf of all the members of a caste the members of the caste have the same interest in the suit within the meaning of this rule (d) See notes above Numerous parties

Trade Union—A trade union may be sued in its registered name or some of its members can be sued under this rule (e)

Fraudulent transfer—A suit to set aside a deed of gift or of trust on the ground that it is in fraud on creditors must be brought by or on behalf of all the creditors Such a suit cannot be entertained if it is brought by only some of the creditors (f)

Suit by a member of a community in his own right—This rule is an enabling rule It does not debar a member of a community from maintaining a suit in his own right though the act complained of may also be injurious to the whole community Thus if Mahomedans belonging to a particular sect are not allowed to use a mosque for prayer any member of the sect entitled to use the mosque may sue as plaintiff to enforce the right It is not necessary that the suit should be brought by him on behalf of himself and all other members of the sect entitled to use the mosque A Mahomedan entitled to worship in a mosque may sue for a declaration that certain property alienated by the mutavali is wakf property and for possession thereof from the alienee (g) Similarly any member of a community may bring a suit to set aside unauthorised alienations of endowed property or of property belonging to the community or for the removal of encroachments upon such property (h) or for maladministration of property belonging to the community (i)

At what stage of the suit leave should be obtained—The proper course is to obtain permission before the suit is instituted but if that is not done the rule does not forbid leave being granted afterwards Permission under this rule may be granted even after the institution of the suit (k)

Whether the leave should be express—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the leave to sue need not be express it is enough if it can be inferred from the proceedings (l) On the other hand there is a dictum of Stuart C J in an Allahabad case (m) that the leave to sue must be express A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that the suit may be a representative suit although the procedure prescribed by this rule has not been followed (n)

Leave must be granted to definitely named persons—Where this was not done the suit was dismissed by the High Court of Calcutta (o) The other Courts would probably grant fresh leave in such a case See notes above At what stage of the suit etc

May be sued—This rule applies not only to the case of numerous plaintiffs having the same interest but also to the case of numerous defendants having the same interest Thus where the inhabitants of a village assert a right of way over land belonging to the plaintiff the plaintiff may with the permission of the Court sue any one or more of the inhabitants on behalf of them all (p) The consent of the defendants on the record is not necessary for this purpose (q)

May defend—When there are numerous defendants having the same interest any one of them may be sued on his behalf and on behalf of others But where this is not done and all the defendants are on the record any one defendant may defend the suit on behalf of himself and the rest with the permission of the Court

Who should apply for permission—(1) Where a plaintiff intends to sue on behalf of himself and others it is the plaintiff that should apply for leave (2) Similarly where a plaintiff intends to sue one defendant for himself and others it is the plaintiff that should apply for leave (3) Where numerous defendants having the same interest are all sued and they are all on the record and if any one defendant is appointed by the other defendants to defend the suit on behalf of all it is that defendant who must apply for leave (r)

In Walker v Sur (s) Vaughan Williams L J said The rule as it stands does not purport to leave it to the mere will or choice of the plaintiff or of the defendants nor to give a right in either case of selection at the choice of a plaintiff who wishes to sue representative members of an unincorporated society It lies with the judge to give the authority and if he thinks it a case in which the plaintiff may properly sue the persons that he proposes to sue as people proper to be authorized to defend in such cause or matter on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested then the order may be made

Notice of suit—Where a person sues or is sued or defends a suit on behalf of himself and others any decree that may be passed in the suit is binding upon them all (s 11 Explanation VI) unless the decree has been obtained by fraud or collusion (Evidence Act 1872 s 44) It is therefore necessary that notice of the suit should be given to all the parties who would be bound by the decree for otherwise a person might be concluded by a suit of which he was unaware and when notice was not given the Patna High Court held that a decree could only be passed against those defendants who were on the record (t) But reference must be made in this connection to the Madras case of Sonachalam v Kumaravelu (u) which holds that the representative character of a suit is a matter of substance rather than of form It is however open to any one of the parties whose name does not stand on the record and who would be bound by the decree under the provisions of this rule and sec 11 to apply to the Court under sub rule (2) to be made a party to the suit and the Court may add him as a party provided his interest will be seriously prejudiced if he is not so joined (v) See note below Adding parties.

Court shall give notice by personal service or by public advertisement — These words show that it is the duty of the Court to cause service of the notice or cause an advertisement to be published It is the duty of the plaintiff however to move the Court for that purpose But if he omits to do so the suit ought not to be dismissed on account of the failure of the Court to perform the duties imposed upon it by this rule The appellate Court should in such a case remand the case to the Court of first instance so that it may issue the notice (w)

Title of suit —When the plaintiff sues or defendant is sued on behalf of himself and others under this rule that fact should be stated in the title of the suit and not merely in the plaint (x) The title of the suit where the plaintiff sues in a representative character is as follows [see Appendix A I leadings (1) Titles of suits] —

A B on behalf of himself and all other creditors of X Y	Plaintiff
C D	Defendant

Suit in name of wrong plaintiff —A brings a suit under this section on behalf of himself and other creditors of Y It turns out that A is not a creditor of Y Thereupon B an admitted creditor of Y applies to be added as a plaintiff under O I r 10 (1) Has the Court power to grant the application ? The question arose in a recent Madras case but it was left open (y) The Madras case was not one of a bona fide mistake and it is submitted that if the suit was instituted by A by such a mistake the amendment may be allowed on terms

Compromise of representative suit —A plaintiff suing in a representative character cannot compromise without leave of the Court nor can he give up or alter any right of the others without their consent or the leave of the Court (z) Similarly a person authorized by the Court to defend a suit on behalf of others having the same interest cannot even if there is no defence consent to judgment against them the proper course in such a case is to submit to judgment on their behalf (a)

Adding parties —The Court will not compel the plaintiff to add the persons on whose behalf he sues as co plaintiffs Thus where an action was brought by a plaintiff on behalf of himself and the other owners of a ship against the defendants for freight and dues for the use of the ship and the defendants applied to add the names of the other owners as plaintiffs in order that the defendants might have the liability of the other owners as plaintiffs for costs it was held that the plaintiff could not be compelled to add the other owners as co plaintiffs (b) Where a plaintiff sues on behalf of himself and others and one of the persons on whose behalf he sues objects to the plaintiff so doing he may apply to have himself added as a defendant (c) If one of the persons on whose behalf the plaintiff purports to sue is dissatisfied with an order made in the suit he may apply to be added as a defendant but he cannot appeal from the order (d) The application to be added as a defendant must be made without unnecessary delay (e) Where in a suit by a creditor for the administration of the estate of the deceased debtor on behalf of himself and other creditors one of the creditors applied to be joined as a party it was held that he should not be so joined unless the Court was satisfied that his interests would be seriously prejudiced if he was not so joined (f) See note above Notice of suit

Addition of plaintiffs after decree —Where the plaintiffs on record neglect to execute the decree passed in a suit brought under this rule the Court may add other persons having the same interest as the plaintiffs to enable them to execute the decree (g)

Decree in a representative suit —The general rule of law is that in suits where one person is allowed to represent others as defendant in a representative capacity any decree passed binds those others only with respect to the property of those others which he can in law represent and although the party on record eo nomine may be made personally liable no personal decree can be passed against the others This is the principle to be applied to suits brought under this rule (h) It has accordingly been held that an injunction in a decree passed in a representative suit brought under this rule is not binding on those who are not actually parties on the record (i) See s 11 Explanation VI and notes above Representative suit

Costs in a representative suit —As to costs in a representative suit see the observations of Marten J in the undermentioned case (j)

Abatement of suit —Where a suit is brought under this rule by A on behalf of himself and 29 others and one of the twenty nine who had never applied to the Court to be made a party under sub r (2) dies pending the suit his death does not cause the suit to abate (k)

Abatement of appeal —A suit is brought by A and B under this rule on behalf of themselves and 387 others against C and a decree is passed in the suit for the plaintiffs C appeals from the decree Pending the appeal 3 out of the 387 who had never applied to be made parties under sub r (2) die C does not apply to bring on record the legal representatives of the three deceased Does the appeal abate? No because the three deceased were not parties to the suit eo nomine (l)

Forty persons institute a suit against B in their own names (and not under this rule) and obtain a decree jointly against B B appeals from the decree and applies for and obtains an order from the appellate Court when the appeal is admitted that 4 out of the 40 respondents may be permitted under this rule to defend the appeal Pending the appeal one of the 36 respondents dies but no steps are taken to bring his legal representative on the record. Does the appeal abate? Yes because the decree was obtained by the plaintiffs for themselves and not in a representative capacity Even if the procedure prescribed by this rule is applicable to appeals by the operation of s 107 the order passed by the appellate Court under this rule did not relieve B from the

9 [S 31, R S C, O 16 r 11] No suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non joinder of parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it

Misjoinder and non joinder

Misjoinder of parties —A misjoinder or non joinder of parties is not fatal to the suit (n) Where there is a misjoinder of parties the name of the plaintiff or the defendant who has been improperly joined may be struck out under r 10 sub r (2) below and the case may be proceeded with See s 99 above

Non joinder of parties —As regards non joinder of parties a distinction has been drawn between the non joinder of a person who ought to have been joined as a party and the non joinder of a person whose joinder is only a matter of convenience or expediency [see O 1 r 10 (2)] A suit by executors trustees co owners of immovable property partners etc for recovery of property in which they are jointly interested belongs to the former class As to this class of cases it has been held that if the suit is brought by some only of the persons interested e g by some of the executors and not all and if the defendant objects on the ground of non joinder the plaintiffs may apply for an amendment to join the absent parties as co plaintiffs in which case the Court should allow the application and not dismiss the suit But if after the objection has been raised the plaintiffs proceed with the suit without bringing on the record the persons whose non joinder has been objected to the suit it has been held must be dismissed This is because O 1 r 9 is a rule of procedure which does not affect substantive law and as the persons not joined are not bound the decree cannot be effective In the latter class of cases that is cases in which the joinder of a person as a party is only a matter of convenience the absent party may be added or the suit may be tried without him (o) The same principle applies in the case of defendants (p) See notes to O 1 r 10 Limitation Act sec 22

Court may strike out or add parties

(2) The Court may at any stage of the proceedings, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just, order that the name of any party improperly joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, be struck out, and that the name of any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, be added

(3) No person shall be added as a plaintiff suing without a next friend or as the next friend of a plaintiff under any disability without his consent

Where defendant is added plaints to be amended

(4) Where a defendant is added, the plaint shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, be amended in such manner as may be necessary and amended copies of the summons and of the plaint shall be served on the new defendant and, if the Court thinks fit, on the original defendant

(5) Subject to the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, section 22, the proceedings as against any person added as defendant shall be deemed to have begun only on the service of the summons

Sub rule (1) is the equivalent of s 27 of the Code of 1882 It corresponds to P S C O 16 r 2

Scope of sub rule (1)—Sub rule (1) contemplates cases in which a suit is brought by a plaintiff and he subsequently discovers that he cannot get full relief without joining some other person as co plaintiff (q) or where it is found that some other person and not the original plaintiff is entitled to the relief claimed In the former case the application (which must be made by the original plaintiff) will be for adding and in the latter for substituting that othe person as plaintiff But the Court must be satisfied before the application is granted that the amendment has become necessary

through a bona fide mistake on the part of the original plaintiff The mistake may be either one of fact (r) or of law (s) Where the point is doubtful it is in itself evidence of a bona fide mistake (t) Again where the Court of first instance takes one view of the law and the Court of Appeal takes another that in itself is evidence of a bona fide mistake (u)

Amendment allowed—(1) The Official Assignee of Madras constitutes A B Official Assignee of Bombay his attorney to institute a suit on his behalf in Bombay A B instead of suing as constituted attorney of the Official Assignee of Madras sues by mistake as Official Assignee of Bombay The plaint may be amended under sub rule (1) by substituting the former description for the latter Sardarmal v Arandaval (1897) 21 Bom 205

(2) A partner in a firm carrying on business out of British India and to which O 30 does not apply files a suit in the name of the firm He was allowed to amend by adding the names of all the partners but the case was treated as one of substitution and not misdescription and he was required to pay costs of the action up to the time of amendment Vyankatesh Oil Mill v Velmahomed (1928) 30 Bom L R 117 109 I C 99 ('28) A B 191

(3) A Hindu appoints A guardian of the property of his minor son under his will but appoints no executor A believing that his appointment as guardian has the effect of constituting him executor of the will by implication sues B to recover certain property belonging to the estate of the deceased The Court finds that A is not executor by implication The plaint may be amended by substituting the son as plaintiff Seshamma v Chennappa (1897) 20 Mad 467 [In this case the amendment was allowed in second appeal]

(4) A sues B for work done under a contract B contends that the contract has been assigned by A to C and A therefore has no right to sue A admits the assignment but says that the assignment is not absolute but by way of charge only and that he has therefore a right to sue It is found that the assignment to C is absolute and that there was a bona fide mistake on the part of A in believing that the assignment was by way of charge only The plaint may be amended by substituting C as plaintiff Hughes v Pump House Hotel Co [1902] 2 K B 485

In the last mentioned case B objected to the amendment on the ground that as the assignment was found to be absolute A had no cause of action at the time the action was brought but the objection was overruled Cozens Hardy L J said It is said that the rule does not apply when it is shown that the plaintiff has no right of action but there are abundant authorities to the contrary effect The cases cited in the judgment in that case clearly show that the plaint would have been allowed to be amended if that was the application by adding C as plaintiff This interpretation of O 16 r 2 of the English Rules which corresponds in wording with sub rule (1) of this rule would seem to be opposed to the view taken by the High Court of Bombay It would seem that the Bombay Court would not allow an amendment if the original plaintiff had no right of action at the time the suit was brought (v) But this view it is submitted is not correct and one of the cases cited by that Court in support of its view affirms the contrary (w) In a recent case the High Court of Madras expressly held that the fact that the original plaintiff has no cause of action does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court to order the substitution of another person as plaintiff (x)

0 Amendment not allowed —It would seem that no amendment should be allowed under sub rule (1) if the rights in dispute between the new plaintiff and the defendant would not be the same as those in dispute between the original plaintiff and the defendant A suit is brought by an importer of Roskopf Patent watches for infringement of trade mark alleging that he has got the exclusive right to use the trade mark in India. The trade mark belongs to the manufacturer and not to the importer The importer is subsequently advised that he cannot sue on the manufacturer's trade mark and he thereupon applies that the manufacturer may be either added or substituted as plaintiff If the manufacturer is made a party his claim will raise questions as to how far he is entitled to the trade mark in the country of its origin and consequently in India That would be a case wholly different from that of the importer Can the manufacturer be made a party under these circumstances? The question arose in a Bombay case (y) Batty J said that the point was one on which there seemed to be considerable room for doubt Eventually the application was refused on the ground that it was made too late

Upon such terms as the Court thinks fit —Liberty to amend may be given upon the terms that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant his costs of the suit upto and including the order of amendment and that the new plaintiff should only be entitled to such relief as he could have claimed if the suit had been commenced at the date on which he was added as a party (z)

Consent —No person can be added or substituted as plaintiff under sub rule (1) without his consent Thus a company cannot be made a plaintiff in a suit without its consent (a) See sub rule (3)

Limitation —Section 22 of the Limitation Act provides that when after the institution of a suit a party is substituted or added as a plaintiff or defendant the date of substitution or addition is to be deemed as regards that party as the date of institution. It has been held that this provision of the law relates only to the addition of parties under sub rule (2) and not under sub rule (1) The result is that a party may be substituted or added under sub rule (1) even after the period of limitation Thus where an agent sued in his own name and subsequently at a time when a new suit would have been barred by limitation his principals were substituted as plaintiffs it was held that the suit being the same the change of parties did not affect the question of limitation (b)

SUB RULES (2) to (5)

Sub rules (2) (3) and (5) correspond to s 32 of the Code of 1882 and to R S C O 16 r 11 Sub rule (4) corresponds to s 33 of the Code of 1882

Old section —Under the old section 32 there was a distinction between the power of the Court to strike out parties and the power to add parties Under that section the power to strike out parties could only be exercised on the application of a party and that too if the application was made on or before the first hearing But the power to add parties could be exercised by the Court at any time and even without any application Under sub rule (2) the power to strike out as well as to add parties may be exercised by the Court at any stage of the proceedings and even without any application by a party

At any stage of the proceedings —The power to strike out or add parties may be exercised at any stage of the proceedings Thus fresh parties were added in one case after a decree had been passed and a reference made to the Commissioner to take accounts and sell the property (c) In another case fresh parties were added after a suit had been reinstated under s 108 of the Code of 1882 [now O 9 r 13] (d) In a Calcutta case a fresh party was added in a suit for partition after the preliminary decree had been passed and the Commissioner had made his report but before the drawing up of the final decree (e) A Court can add parties after the suit has been remanded to it by the Court of appeal (f) Under the corresponding English rule it has been held that the Court has jurisdiction to allow amendment even after final judgment so long as anything remains to be done in the action though it be only assessment of damages (g)

Parties when added —Under this rule a person may be added as a party to a suit in the following two cases —

(1) when he ought to have been joined as plaintiff or defendant and not so joined or

(2) when without his presence the questions in the suit cannot be completely decided

There is no jurisdiction to add a party in any other case (h) Thus a person should not be added as a defendant merely because he would be incidentally affected by the judgment (i) The Secretary of State is not a proper or necessary party in every suit in which a statute is challenged as ultra vires (j)

Parties cannot be added so as to introduce quite a new cause of action —A purchased goods from B by sample The bulk did not correspond with the sample and A thereupon sued B for damages B contended that he had purchased the goods in question from X by sample and applied that X should be added as a party to the suit as the question between him (B) and X was the same as the question between him (B) and A (ii whether the goods were according to the sample) so as to relieve him (B) from the necessity of bringing a fresh suit against X in the event of the Court holding that the goods were not according to the sample Held refusing B s application that X was not a person who ought to be joined as a party to the suit nor was his presence necessary to decide the questions involved in the suit In this case A had nothing to do with X and to add X as a party would be to introduce a new cause of action which existed only as between B and X The Court would then have to inquire into the circumstances under which B s agreement with X was entered into an inquiry with which A had nothing to do (k)

Parties cannot be added so as to alter the nature of the suit — A sued for his share of the estate of a deceased relative On an application to have other persons interested in the said estate added as parties to the suit it was held that the Court could not add them as parties as to do so would be to alter the nature of the suit by converting it into a general administration suit (l) It has similarly been held that parties should not be added in a suit for rent so as to change it into a suit for title though questions of title may be incidentally investigated in a suit for arrears of rent e g where the tenant disputes the extent of the title of the plaintiff to the arrears claimed by the plaintiff (m)

Transposing defendant as plaintiff —The Court has power under sub r (2) to transfer a defendant to the category of plaintiffs Thus where A and B are trustees

10 of certain property and A brings a suit to recover the property from C impleading B as a defendant the Court may on A s death transpose B as plaintiff for the further conduct of the suit (n) In a Bombay case A brought a partnership suit for accounts against 12 defendants He then settled with most of the defendants and applied to the Court for leave to withdraw the suit or that the suit might be dismissed. Two of the defendants objected to the dismissal of the suit and applied that they might be made plaintiffs and that the plaintiff might be made a defendant and the suit proceeded with The Court granted the application (o) A sues B to recover money borrowed by B from C who is dead alleging that C had created a trust of the money and that he was appointed trustee of the money C s widow is impleaded as a co defendant in the suit It is found that the money sued for was not trust money but it belonged absolutely to C This is a proper case in which the Court should remove the widow from the array of defendance and bring her in the array of plaintiffs (p) A defendant may be transferred to the category of plaintiffs on his application even after a preliminary decree for accounts has been passed (q) But the Court should not make an order transferring a defendant to the category of plaintiffs if it results in changing the character of the suit (r) A sues B to recover a sum of money and impleads C who says that he and not A is entitled to the money as a co defendant C applies that he should be allowed to continue the suit as plaintiff instead of A The application should be refused even if it is found that C and not A is entitled to the money To grant the application would be to deprive A of his right to ask for a determination upon his claim (s)

Transposing plaintiff as defendant—In the case of a difference between co plaintiffs the proper course is to make an order that the name of one of them be struck out as plaintiff and added as a defendant (t) But such an order will be made only on security being given by the plaintiff who continues on the record as plaintiff for the costs of the original defendant up to the date of the amendment (u) Such an order may be supported by the terms of sub r (2) namely on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just

Striking out name of party improperly joined—The impropriety referred to in this rule is in introducing a party who has no connection with the relief claimed in the plaint (v)

Who ought to have been joined—Sub r (2) provides for the addition of (1) necessary parties and (2) of proper parties Necessary parties are parties who ought to have been joined that is parties necessary to the constitution of the suit without whom no decree at all can be passed (w) Proper parties are those whose presence enables the Court to adjudicate more effectually and completely (x) as explained in the next paragraph

All co sharers are necessary parties to a suit for partition and they should all be joined as parties to the suit Similarly in a suit to recover trust property all the trustees must be joined as parties [O 31 r 2] But the Official Assignee is not a necessary party in a suit against an insolvent (y) [see O 22 r 10 notes Assignment of interest ills (3) and (4)] In a suit to set aside an order for rateable distribution all persons interested in the distribution must be parties to the suit (z) see s 73 In a suit for dissolution of partnership all partners are necessary parties but a person who is not in the partnership as a member of the firm but who is a member of a superior partnership in which he is on one side and the whole firm as a unit on the other is not a necessary party (a) See notes below Limitation Act O 1

Whose presence before the Court may be necessary —A person may be added as a defendant to a suit though no relief may be claimed against him provided his presence is necessary for a complete and final decision of the questions involved in the suit (b) Such a person is called a proper party as distinguished from a necessary party Thus if a suit is brought by a legatee against an executor for a legacy but the estate is not sufficient to pay all the legacies in full the executor may apply under sub rule (2) that the other legatees may be made parties so that if any rateable abatement is requisite the extent of such abatement may be ascertained in a manner binding on all the legatees (c) In a suit by a benamidar of the mortgagee the mortgagee may be made a party to the suit if his presence is necessary for the proper determination of the suit (d) Where in an administration suit in which the original parties do not dispute one another s status as heirs a person applies to be made a defendant and claims to be the sole heir of the deceased whose estate is to be administered so that if his claim is established the suit would dismissed it was held that the Court can allow him to be added as a defendant in the suit in order to prevent multiplicity of suits and such person need not be compelled to file a separate suit to establish his status (e) See notes above Who ought to have been joined

Questions involved in the suit — Questions involved in the suit refer only to questions between parties to the suit (f) Further they refer only to questions as between plaintiffs and defendants and not to questions which may arise between co plaintiffs or between co defendants inter se (g)

Improper addition of plaintiff or defendant—Sub rule (2) does not enable a Court to override the effect of O 2 r 3 Hence if the joinder of a person as plaintiff would result in a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action or the joinder of a person as defendant would result in a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action the application should be refused (h) Similarly if the joinder of a person as plaintiff is not possible under O 1 r 1 it does not become possible under this rule (i)

Consent of person added as plaintiff—If any person who ought to have been joined as plaintiff does not consent to join as plaintiff he may be made a defendant in the suit The proper course is first to require him to join as plaintiff and if he refuses to join as plaintiffs then to join him as defendant But the suit should not be dismissed merely because he is joined as defendant without being first called upon to join as plaintiff (j)

Suit against a dead person—Where a suit is brought against a person who is found to have died before its institution the plaint cannot be amended by bringing his legal representative on the record though the suit may have been filed in ignorance of his death The reason is that a suit against a dead man is a nullity from the first (k) But if a suit is against several defendants one of whom is found to have died before

10 its institution the suit should not be dismissed. It should proceed against the other defendants and the legal representatives of the deceased should be joined if he was a necessary party (l)

Limitation Act sec 22 provides amongst other things that when after the institution of a suit a party is added as a plaintiff or defendant the date of addition is to be considered as regards that party as the date of the institution of the suit It has been held under this section that where necessary parties are not joined within the period of limitation the suit must be dismissed. Necessary parties mean parties necessary to the constitution of the suit (m) that is persons whose joinder is necessary to enable the Court to award such relief as may be given in the suit as framed (n) Thus in a suit by one of several joint promisees the other promisees are necessary parties for no relief can be given to one of them The suit is not perfectly constituted unless all the co promisees join for the plaintiff can only enforce his claim in conjunction with them. If in such a suit the other promisees are not joined within the period of limitation the suit must be dismissed (o) Similarly where A B and C were three partners and A sued B only for partnership accounts and C was added as a defendant after the period of limitation the suit was dismissed (p) On the same ground where a member of a joint Hindu family sued in his own name for a joint debt without making the other members parties to the suit and the defendant raised an objection on the ground of non joinder and the period of limitation had by that time expired it was held that it was too late to join the other members as co plaintiffs as the claim was at that date time barred and the suit was accordingly dism ssed (q) And the suit must likewise be dismissed even if the Court of its own motion adds the other members as plaintiffs in circumstances such as those mentioned above The mere fact that the Court of its own motion orders that the name of any person be added as a party does not render the provisions of s 22 inapplicable to the case (r) There is nothing in sub rule (2) which frees the Court when acting of its own motion from the restrictions of the Limitation Act in other words a Court acting under sub rule (2) is bound by the provisions of s 22 of the Limitation Act (s) and the rights which parties may have acquired under the Limitation Act are therefore safeguarded (t) On the other hand when a suit can be and is constituted without joining certain persons as parties and they are subsequently added as parties for the benefit of the defendants to ensure them against further litigation the suit should proceed though they are added as parties after the expiry of the period of limitation and the Court should award such relief as may be given in the suit as framed to such a case the provisions of s 22 do not apply (u) Thus where a promissory note is passed to the manager of a joint Hindu family he may sue the promisor without joining the other members of the family as co plaintiffs In such a case if the other members are joined as plaintiffs after the statutory period has expired their joinder being unnecessary does not prevent the suit as originally constituted from being in time (v) It has similarly been held that that section does not apply when a person is added as a party merely to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon the questions involved in the suit without any relief being claimed against him (w) Further the section does not apply where an assignee from a party to a suit the assignment having been made pending the suit is joined as a party to the suit (x) It has also been held that that section does not apply where a person is joined as a defendant in a suit and he is subsequently added as a plaintiff (y) In a case before the Privy Council where relief was claimed against a debuttor estate but none of the defendants was impleaded as representing the estate and subsequently though after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the suit one of the defendants [i e a person already a party to the suit] was impleaded as sebait and as representing the estate it was held that s 22 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case ( ) Where a suit is originally brought against a firm in the name of the firm but subsequently the title of the plaint is amended by substituting the names of the members of the defendants family on its being brought that the defendant is not a firm but an undivided Hindu family the suit is not affected by the provisions of sec 22 (1) of the Indian Limitation Act since there is no addition of parties but only a substitution in order to correct a misdescription (a)

Party may be added at any stage of suit—Subject to the provisions of the Limitation Act referred to above a person may be added as a party to a suit at any stage of the suit and even at the time of passing the decree (b)

Misdescription—Where there is a misdescription of a defendant in the title of a suit there is complete power in the Court to make the necessary correction without regard to lapse of time In this class of cases it is material to ascertain against whom the relief is claimed A sues the Municipal Committee of Gorakhpur through the Secretary instead of suing the Committee through the President as ought to have been done The relief claimed is against the Committee No personal relief is sought against the Secretary The case is one of misdescription and the plaint may be amended though the application for amendment is made after the expiry of the period of limitation (c) A sues The Agent B B & C I Ry Co Ltd The relief claimed is against the railway company No personal relief is claimed against the Agent A applies for amendment of the plaint after the expiry of the statutory period by striking out the word Agent The amendment should be allowed the suit being substantially against the company (d) But if the relief claimed was as against the Agent personally the amendment can be allowed only if there is no question of limitation (e) but not after the expiry of the period of limitation for the suit (f) Where a suit is brought against a joint Hindu family firm in the name of the firm the title of the plaint may be amended by substituting the names of the members of the joint family even after the period of limitation prescribed for the institution of the suit (g) Where a partner in a firm carrying on business out of British India and to which O 30 does not apply files a suit in the name of the firm and applies afterwards to amend the plaint by adding the names of the partners the case is not one of mis description but of substitution within sub rule (1) of this rule (h) See note to sub rule (1) Amendment allowed

Appeal —No appeal lies under this Code from any order made under this rule But where the name of a d fendant is struck out under this rule on the ground that the plaint do s not dis los any cause of action against him the order operates as a decree and is appealable as such (i) Similarly if in a suit for partition the name of one of the defendants is struck out on the ground that he has no interest in the properties the subject matter of the suit he may appeal from the order as the order operates as a decree against him (j)

Revision —An order refusing to add a party as a defendant is not subject to revision under s 115 but the High Court may interfere under s 107 of the Govern ment of India Act 1915 if there is a denial of the right of fair trial (k) Nor is an order refusing to substitute as plaintiffs in a suit persons interested in the suit (l)

11 [S 32, 6th para Cf R S C O 16, r 39] The Court may give the conduct of the suit to such person as it deems proper

Conduct of suit

Person —The word person refers to a party to the suit and the Court cannot give the conduct of the suit to a stranger (m)

12 [S 35] (1) Where there are more plaintiffs than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to ap pear, plead or act for such other in any pro ceeding, and in like manner, where there are more defendants than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding

Appearance of one of several plaintiffs or defen dants for others

(2) The authority shall be in writing signed by the party giving it and shall be filed in Court

13 [S 34] All objections on the ground of non joinder or misjoinder of parties shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived

Objections as to non joinder or misjoinder

Scope of the rule —This rule refers to two kinds of objections the one for non joinder of parties and the other for misjoinder of parties These objections must be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement otherwise the objection will be deemed to have been waived (n)

Where an objection to non joinder (o) or misjoinder (p) of parties is not taken in the Court of first instance it will be disallowed in appeal See notes to O 1 r 9 above See also s 99

Unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen —These words are new When the ground of objection has arisen subsequent to the settlement of issues the objection may be taken even after the settlement of issues In fact it was so held under the old section though the words unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen did not occur in that section Thus if a co parcener or a reversioner or a remainderman is born after the settlement of issues in a suit to which he is a necessary party and the plaintiff does not make him a party the defendant may object to his non joinder though issues have already been settled Thus in a partition suit all coparceners must be joined as parties even though some of them may be born after the institution of the suit Similarly where a woman who is a party to a suit is married after the settlement of issues and the nature of the suit is such that the husband is a necessary party the plaintiff should make the husband a party and the defendant may raise this objection though it be after the settlement of issues (q)

ORDER II

Frame of Suit

1 [S 42] Every suit shall as far as practicable be framed so as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning them

Frame of suit

From this rule read with r 2 below the intention of the Legislature appears to be that as far as possible all matters in dispute between the parties relating to the same transaction should be disposed of in the same suit (r)

2 [S 43] (1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court

Suit to include the whole claim

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished

Relinquishment of part of claim

2 (3) A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs, but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he shall not afterwards sue for any relief so omitted

Omission to sue for one of several reliefs

Explanation —For the purposes of this rule an obligation and a collateral security for its performance and successive claims arising under the same obligation shall be deemed respectively to constitute but one cause of action

Illustration

A lets a house to B at a yearly rent of Rs 1 200 The rent for the whole of the years 1905 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid A sues B in 1908 only for the rent due for 1906 A shall not afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1905 or 1907

Changes in the section —The words obtained before the first hearing after the words the leave of the Court [see sub rule (3)] have been omitted The words and succes ive claims arising under the same obligation have been added into the Explanation The illustration has been expanded so as to comprise the case of rent due for a period subsequent to the one for which the suit is brought

Cause of action —In Pittapur Raja v Suriya Rau (s) their Lordships of the Privy Council referring to the expression cause of action in this rule said that it meant the cause of a tion for which the suit was brought Peferring to this decision their Lordships said in the recent case of Muhammad Hafi v Muhammad Zakariya (t) The Lordships see no reason to attempt to qualify or to extend those words because they are in fact nothing but a repetition of the exact words of the Code the cause of action is the cause of action which gives occasion for and forms the foundation of the suit and if that cause enables a man to ask for larger and wider relief than that to which he limits his claim he cannot afterwards seek to recover the balance by independent proceedings See notes to s 20 Cause of action

Splitting of claim —This and the preceding rule are aimed against a multiplicity of suits in respect of the same cause of action (u) The object of the present rule is to use the language of r 1 of this order to prevent further litigation For that purpose the rule provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action He is not entitled to split his cause of action into parts and bring separate suits in respect of each part If he omits to sue in respect of or intentionally relinquishes any portion of the claim arising from the same cause of action he will be precluded from suing in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished even though he states in his plaint that he intends to bring a second suit for the portion omitted (t) But it cannot be said of a plaintiff that he has omitted to sue in respect of a portion of his claim unless he was at some time prior to the suit aware or informed of the claim or of the facts which would give him a cause of action (w) If the plaintiff was aware of the claim and omitted to sue in respect thereof he could not afterwards sue in respect thereof though the omission

Explanation to the Rule—

A Obligation and collateral security for its performance—The Explanation to the present rule is not intended to be an illustration of the foregoing provision but a substantive enactment making an obligation and a collateral security for its performance (which would otherwise be two independent causes of action) one cause of action for the purposes of the rule (z) In a recent case their Lordships of the Privy Council said (a)

The [Explanation] shows that a personal claim for the mortgage money under a mortgage and the enforcement of the security for the debt are to be regarded as one and the same cause of action That provision is in marked distinction to the law of this country where a mortgagee is at liberty to appoint a receiver under his deed to sue for the debt and to take proceedings for sale or foreclosure independently and at the same time It is important therefore in considering the effect of th code to bear in mind that its obvious intention is to establish a rule of law different from that accepted here

B Successive claims arising under the same obligation constitute a single cause of action—The words successive claims arising under the same obligation have been added into the Explanation and the illustration to the rule has been expanded to give effect to a Calcutta decision where it was held that a claim in respect of all arrears of rent constitutes a single cause of action (b) The illustration shows that if rent has become due for the years 1905 1906 and 1907 the landlord can bring only one suit for the whole of the rent in arrears and that if he sues for the rent due for a particular year only he will be precluded from suing for the rent due for the other years It must however be noted that though this rule precludes the landlord from bringing a fresh suit for rent not included in the former suit it does not prevent him from adopting any other remedy the law gives him to recover the rent Thus though in the case put in the illustration the landlord cannot sue for the rent due for the year 190 or 1907 he can distrain for the rent due for those years (c) On the same principle as in the illustration a suit for an annuity for the year 1917 is a bar to a subsequent suit for annuity for the years 1914 1915 and 1916 (d) See also ill (7) above

Interest accruing due from time to time under a mortgage deed maintenance malikana &c are other instances of successive claims arising under the same obligation

Distinct causes of action —If the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit the subsequent suit is not barred (e) What the rule requires is that every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising from one and the same cause of action and not that every suit shall include every claim or every cause of action which the plaintiff may have against the defendant (f) As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Payana v Pana Lana (g) the rule is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action and not to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action even though they arise from the same transaction One great criterion when the question arises as to whether the cause of action in the subsequent suit is identical with that in the first suit is whether the same evidence will maintain both actions (h) For the meaning of cause of action see notes above Cause of action

2 In Muhammad Hafi v Muhammad Zakariya (v) A executed a simple mortgage in 1910 The mortgage provided by cl. 2 that the interest should be paid monthly and that if it was not paid for 6 months the mortgagee could realize either the unpaid interest only or both the principal and interest by bringing a suit without waiting for the expiration of the time provided for repayment of the principal By cl 7 it was provided that if the principal with interest was not paid within 3 years the mortgagee should be entitled to sue for principal and interest In 1914 the mortgagee sued in respect of the interest due and obtained a decree In 1915 he brought a second suit in respect of the principal and the interest th n due Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the second suit could not be maintained having regard to the provisions of this rule Their Lordships said What was the cause of action that the plaintiffs possessed when the proceedings were first instituted ? It was the cause of action due either to the fact that the interest had been unpaid for more than six months or that the three years had elapsed and the principal was also unpaid and in either case they could have sued for realisation to provide for the whole amount secured by the deed Not having done so they were debarred from instituting the second suit

The question came up again before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kishan Narain v Pala Mal (w) The rule to be deduced from that decision may be stated thus If a mortgage deed provides for the payment of principal and interest as independent obligations a suit for a personal decree for the interest due is no bar to a subsequent suit to realize the principal In such a case the two causes of action are distinct But if the mortgage deed in default of payment of interest gives the mortgagee the right to realize both the principal and interest and the mortgagee upon a default occurring sues to realize the interest from the property O 2 r 2 he is precluded from afterwards suing to realize the principal due even though his plaint in the first suit has purported to reserve the right to do so The reason is that in such a case the cause of action—the non payment of the interest—gives rise to two forms of relief which the Code provides shall not be split see the Explanation to the Rule Their Lordships observed that if the mortgagees in their first suit claimed only a personal relief in respect of the unpaid interest their case would be on surer ground. But their claim in the first suit was for a decree for interest recoverable from the mortgaged property

First suit for produce payable under a mortgage second suit for possession —A mortgage bond provides that the mortgagor shall pay a share of the produce of the mortgaged land to the mortgagee every year and that in default the mortgagee shall be entitled to take possession of the land. The mortgagor fails to pay the produce for the year 1896 In 1897 the mortgagee sues for the value of the produce for 1896 but he does not claim possession of the land as he was entitled to do under the bond This suit is a bar to a subsequent suit for possession on the mortgagor s failure to pay the produce for sub sequent years The mortgagee ought to have claimed possession in the first suit (x) See notes below Omission to sue for one of several reliefs ill (1) plaintiff should sue for all of them in one suit What the rule lays down is that where there is one entire cause of action the plaintiff cannot split the cau e of action into parts so as to bring separate suits in respect of those parts As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Payana v Pana Lana (a) the rule is directed to securing the exhau tion of the relief in respect of a cause of action and not to the inclusion in one and the ame action of different causes of action even though they arise from the same transaction It was held in that ca e that a suit upon a promissory note the suit failing owing to a material alteration in the note was not a bar to a subsequent suit to recover the consideration for which the promis ory note was given

In Anderson v Kalagarla (b) A agreed to purcha e 10 bales of yarn from B A took delivery of 7 bale but failed to pay the price of those bales and as regards the remaining 3 bales refu ed to take de ivery thereof Garth C J expre sed the opinion that a suit by B again t A to recover damages for failure to take delivery of the three bales wa not a bar to a subsequent suit by B to recover from A the price of the 7 bales The learned judge observed that a claim for the price of goods sold was a cause of action of a different nature from a claim for damages for the non acceptance of goods and the fact that both claims aro e under the same contract did not constitute them one and the same cause of action Wilson J expressed a different opinion stating that the claims having ari en under the same contract the cau e of action was but one and that the subsequent suit was therefore barred The opinion of Wilson J was followed in Duncan v Jeetmull (c) which also was a case of breach of one and the same contract These two cases show that all existing breaches of the same contract must be joined in the same suit but they have been held not to apply to the case where there are separate contracts though contained in the same instrument (d) Thus where it is expressly provided by an indent that each monthly shipment and item should be treated as a separate contract the plaintiff is entitled to bring a separate suit for damages in respect of each shipm ent (e) Conversely where goods are delivered under separate orders each order and delivery of goods is a separate contract and a separate cause of action unless it be proved that all the goods were delivered as under a single contract (f) See notes below He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted

Closely connected with this question is a point which was left open by their Lordships of the Privy Council namely whether a mortgagee who hold several mortgages on the same property can treat them with respect to the provi ions of this rule as separate causes of action or whether he must bring one suit on all the mortgages (g) This subject has already been considered in the notes to s 11 under the head Application of the above rules to suits on mortgage

Omits to sue in respect of any portion of his claim —This rule refers to cases where a suit has been filed and the plaintiff omit in such suit to sue in respect of a portion of the claim (h) It does not apply where no suit has been filed as where a plaint is returned to the plaintiff for pre entation to the proper Court and the plaintiff does nothing further in the matter (i) nor does it apply where a suit is filed and sub equently withdrawn under O 23 r 1 (1) below (j)

2 by obtaining leave to sue in respect of the portion so omitted the reason is that the leave contemplated by this section is the leave to sue for one of several reliefs referred to in sub r (3) it does not relate to the portion so omitted referred to in sub r (2) (l)

The rule says he shall not afterwards sue It does not therefore apply where the suits are simultaneous and not successive (m) But fractions of a day are recognized and on the presumption that suits filed on the same day are filed in the order of their numbers in the register it has been held that the suit of the subsequent number is barred (n) But that presumption has been doubted and the plaintiff allowed to elect which suit shall be held to be barred under this rule (o)

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the present rule refers to a case where there has been a suit in which there has been an omission to sue in respect of portion of a claim and a decree has been passed in that suit So long as no decree is passed a second suit in respect of the portion so omitted is not barred It follows from this that where a suit brought in respect only of a portion of a cause of action has not been heard and decided the Court may allow the plaint in the suit to be amended by adding the omitted portion of the claim (p) Similarly if such a suit is withdrawn under O 23 r 1 (2) with liberty to bring a fresh suit the plaintiff may include in the fresh suit the portion that was omitted in the suit withdrawn by him (q)

A sues B in respect of a portion only of a cause of action Pending this suit A brings another suit against B in respect of the remaining portion of the same cause of action. According to the Calcutta decision cited above neither suit is a bar to the other so long as no decree is passed in either suit It is open therefore to A to rectify his error in bringing two suits in respect of the same cause of action by applying for leave to amend the plaint in either suit by adding the omitted portion which forms the subject matter of the other suit and then withdrawing the other suit under O 23 r 1 (1) The Chief Court of the Punjab has gone further and held that if in such a case A is allowed to withdraw either suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit under s 23 r 1 (2) he is entitled to bring a fresh suit by virtue of the leave granted to him though the other suit has been carried to a decision (r)

Omitting to sue for one of several reliefs —Where a person is entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action he may sue for all the reliefs or he may sue for one or more of them and reserve his right with the leave of the Court to sue for the rest (s) If no such leave is obtained he will be precluded from afterwards suing for any relief so omitted (t) But if the right to the relief in respect of which a further suit is brought did not exist at the date of the institution of the former suit the subsequent suit is not barred (u) The words in s. 43 of the Code of 1882 were with the leave of the Court obtained before the first hearing Those words were construed literally and it was held that leave might be applied for and obtained when the case was called on for first hearing and before anything had been done towards the hearing of the suit (v) The italicized words have been omitted with the result that the leave may now be granted at any stage of the suit The leave however must be obtained from the Court before which the original suit was pending The leave if granted is good even if the pecuniary value of the relief allowed to be omitted from the suit exceeds the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court granting the leave (w)

Exceptions to the rule against splitting of reliefs—

1 Order 34 rule 14 —Sub rule (3) provides that where a person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action omits except with the leave of the Court to sue for all such reliefs he cannot afterwards sue for any relief so omitted According to this sub rule if a mortgagee sues the mortgagor on the personal covenant to repay the mortgage debt and omits to sue for sale of the mortgaged property he cannot afterwards sue for sale unless he has reserved his right to do so with the leave of the Court To this however there is an exception being that contained in O 34 r 14 The latter rule may be stated thus a mortgagee sues the mortgagor to recover the mortgage-debt from the mortgagor personally and obtains a decree He then applies for the attachment and sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree The mortgaged property may be attached but it cannot be sold in execution proceedings The only mode of bringing it to sale is by instituting a fresh suit for sale O 34 r 14 says that the mortgagee

may institute such a suit notwithstanding anything contained in O 2 r 2 (x) The suit will be one under s 67 of the Transfer of Property Act 1882 It must however be noted that though O 34 r 14 allows a mortgagee to split his remedies it does not allow him to split his claim (y)

2 Order 34 rule 6 —The effect of this rule is that where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property and the property is sold but the net sale proceeds are not sufficient to pay the mortgage debt he may subsequently apply for a decree for the balance notwithstanding anything contained in O 2 r 2 although a claim to such relief has not been included in his suit ( ) This however is not strictly speaking an exception for no separate suit has to be brought for a decree for the balance

3 Deccan Agriculturists Relief Act 1879 (as amended by Act XXII of 1882) s 15 1 —The effect of the said section is to allow a mortgagor to split his remedies by providing in effect that if he sues the mortgagee for an account he will not be precluded from suing him subsequently for redemption (a)

Leave to sue —See notes He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted and Omission to sue for one of several reliefs

Withdrawal of one of two pending suits —See notes above He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted.

Minors —The provisions of this rule apply to adults as well as minors Thus a suit by a minor by his guardian and next friend for rent due for 1903 and 1904 will bar a subsequent suit by the minor on attaining majority for the rent due for 1901 and 1902 The acts of a guardian in the conduct of a suit must be upheld, unless it is shown that they were unreasonable or improper (b) or that the minor s interests were not properly safeguarded (c)

Official Assignee —This rule merely bars a second suit Therefore the Official Assignee cannot by an application to the Insolvency Court ask for a declaration on behalf of the insolvent mortgagor that the right of the mortgagee to sue for the principal is barred under this rule (d)

Execution proceedings —The present rule does not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree A decree holder may therefore present successive applications for realizing different portions of his decree Thus if a decree gives reliefs for possession and costs there is nothing in the Code which prevents separate and successive applications for execution as regards either of them (e)

(2) Where causes of action are united, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit shall depend on the amount or value of the aggregate subject matters at the date of instituting the suit

Scope of the rule.—O 1 r 1 deals with joinder of plaintiffs O 1 r 3 deals with joinder of defendants The present rule deals with joinder of causes of actions It is to be read subject to the provisions of rr 4 and 5 below as is shown by the words save as otherwi e provided (f) It is also to be read subject to the provisions of O 1 rr 1 and 3 The frame of a suit may not be supported by this rule and yet it may be justified by O 1 r 1 or O 1 r 3 (g) Rules 6 and 7 of this Order are to be read with this rule

Cause of action—See notes to s 20 Cause of action

One plaintiff one defendant and two or more causes of action—Where there is only one plaintiff and only one defendant the rule says that the plain tiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant provided of course that the provisions of rr 4 and 5 of this Order are not contravened If the causes of action are so disconnected that they cannot be conveniently tried together the Court may order separate trials under r 6 below These trials however will not be distinct suits but they will be in the nature of sub suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring (h) In Saccharine Corporation Ltd v Wild (i) the plaintiff corporation the owners of twenty three patents for saccharin sued the defendant for alleged infringement of all the trade marks There were thus twenty three causes of action united in one suit It was ordered that the suit should be confined in the first instance to any three of the patents which the plaintiffs might select Collins M R said Now we start here with a writ launched covering twenty three causes of action Prima facie in old days one cause of action was thought to be enough That was gradually more or less relaxed and one cau e of action was allowed to be coupled with one or two subordinate or necessarily connected causes of action Then came by the Rules under the Judicature Acts a still further relaxation but always subject to the one underlying principle namely that the burden lay on the plaintiff to prove his case and that no extra burden should be impo ed on the defendant through the plaintiff needlessly enlarging the area of dispute Prima facie a do en causes of action cannot be combined in one writ they mu t be so intimately connected as to justify their being included in one writ but when one finds no less than twenty three that seems to me to be an outrageous extension of the latitude given by the rules to the plaintiff (j) Cozen Hardy L J said The action strikes me as almo t an abuse of the proce s of the Court (k)

The rule that a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several cau es of action against the same defendant does not apply to suits for rent under the Agra Tenancy Act Hence a plaintiff cannot join in one suit claims for arrears of rent of occupancy and non occupancy holdings though the claims may be against the same defendant (l) In a cas under the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 188 the Privy Council held that a plaintiff may join in one suit claims against a defendant in respect of more than one tenure (m)

Misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action—Where there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action the rule says that any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant may unite such causes of action in the same suit But the rule is to be read subject to the provisions of O 1 r 1 The result is that where there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action they may be joined in one suit if the right to the relief and the causes of action arise from the same act or transaction and that there is a common question of law or fact though they may not all be jointly interested in all the causes of action But if the right to the relief claimed does not arise from the same act or transaction or if there is no common question of law or fact the plaintiffs cannot all join in one suit unless they are jointly interested in the causes of action as provided by this rule (n) See notes to O 1 r 1 The new Rule ills (1) to (4)

Where the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in the causes of action united in one suit the suit is said to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action X sell to Y two plots of land adjoining each other one of which is claimed by A by adverse possession and the other by B by adverse possession Under the Code of 1882 A and B could not join together as plaintiffs in one suit against X and Y for the evidence of adverse possession by A would not be evidence of adverse possession in favour of B and vice versa (o) This would also be the case under this Code Similarly where five plaintiffs contract separately to sell cotton though to the same defendant they cannot all join in one suit for damages for breach of the five contracts (p)

Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action — Under the Code of 1882 where a plaint was presented which was bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action the Judge to whom the plaint was presented might return it for amendment under s 53 If the plaint having been returned for amendment was not amended it might be rejected under s 54 cl (d) If the defect was not noticed when the plaint was presented but was brought to the notice of the Court at a later stage the Court might grant leave to the plaintiffs to amend the plaint within a time fixed by the Court and might order that if the amendment was not made within the time prescribed the suit should stand dismissed with costs Where leave to amend was granted the plaintiff had to elect as to which of them should proceed with the suit and the plaint had then to be amended by striking out the names of the other plaintiffs and making consequential amendments (q) At the same time liberty was given to the defendant to amend his written statement to meet the case of the particular plaintiff who had elected to proceed with the suit (r) It was also held in some cases under that Code that where a suit was bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action it was not proper to dismiss the suit without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of amendment (s) If the suit was dismissed and the plaintiffs appealed the appellate Court might set aside the decree and remand the case to the lower Court with a direction to that Court to return the plaint for amendment (t) As to the procedure to be followed under the present Code see notes to r 7 below

Where the defendant objects to the frame of a suit on the ground that the suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action but the objection is overruled and a decree is passed for the plaintiffs and the defendant appeals from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action the appellate Court if it found there had been such a misjoinder should not interfere with the decree unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case This is the effect of the provisions of s 99 of this Code which enjoins inter alia that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action where such misjoinder does not affect the merits of the case The italicized words are new They did not occur in the corresponding s 578 of the Code of 1882 They have been added into s 99 to supersede the practice followed under the old Code Under that Code where a decree was passed for the plaintiffs in a suit involving a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action the course adopted by the appellate Court was to reverse the decree in appeal and remand the case to the lower Court with the directions to that Court to return the plaint to the plaintiffs for amendment so that the plaintiffs might elect as to which of them should continue as plaintiffs in the suit (u) Such a course would not have been necessary if a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action was an irregularity such as could be condoned under s 578 But the practice referred to developed as the cases were against the application of s 578 (v) The effect of section 99 is to preclude the appellate Court from reversing a decree on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action and remanding the case to the lower Court as was done under the old Code unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case

Misjoinder of defendants and causes of action—Where there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action the rule says that the plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendants jointly Joint interest in the questions raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action against several defendants (w) If the causes of action alleged are separate and the defendants are arrayed in different sets the suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action and is technically multifarious (x) There is no provision in the Code allowing distinct causes of action against distinct sets of defendants that is to say causes of action in which the defendants are not all jointly interested to be united in one suit (y) This rule however is to be read subject to the provisions of O 1 r 3 which relates to joinder of defendants Hence two or more defendants may be joined as parties in one suit though there are two or more causes of action provided the right to the relief claimed arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or fact and this is so although they may not all be jointly interested in all the causes of action But if the right to the relief claimed does not arise from the same act or transaction or if there be no common question of law or fact the defendants cannot all be joined in one suit unless they are jointly interested in the causes of action as provided by this rule ( ) See notes to O 1 r 3 New [illegible] (4) (5) and (6) The following are instances of cases in which it was held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action

The rule in De Houghton v Money and Luckumsey v Fa ulla is that if on the face of the plaint or of the plaintiff s case it appears that a third party who was not a party to the contract upon which the suit was brought had a distinct interest but which interest is sought to be declared null and void upon some equitable ground such a claim against the aid third party could not be made a part of the suit In the case of De Houghton v Money it was admitted by the plaintiff that there was a conveyance in favour of Money but it was said that that conveyance was executed under such circumstances as would make it a voidable one and in the case of Luckumsey v Fa ulla it was clearly admitted by the plaintiff that the third party who was not a party to the contract had a distinct interest (a) The case is different however where A (purchaser) sues B (vendor) and C (vendor s benamidar) claiming specific performance against B and a declaration against C that C is a mere benamidar for there the two defendants are identical and there is but one cau e of action and no misjoinder Mokund Lall v Chotay Lall (1884) 10 Cal 1061 1068 1069

In ills (1) and (3) what were really two suits were combined into one In ill (2) what were really seven suits were united in one suit In all these cases it was held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action The reason why the law forbids a joinder in one suit of distinct causes of action against different defendants each of whom is unconnected with the cause of action against the others may thus be stated in the words of Peacock C J (b) Such a joinder complicates the case before the Judge and renders it exceedingly difficult for him in dealing with the case of each defendant to exclude from his consideration those portions of the evidence which may not be admissible against him though admissible against one or more of the others Moreover it is vexatious and harassing to the different defendants Such a procedure renders it almost compulsory on all the defendants to be present either in person or by their pleaders whilst the case is going on against the others in respect of matters in which they are not interested and moreover it is harassing and inconvenient as regards the attendance of the witnesses of the several defendants as it renders it necessary for the witnesses of each to be present and to be detained whilst the case of the others is being heard and determined For further illustrations see notes to O 1 r 3 under the heads New Rule and Severally

Procedure in case of multifariousness that is misjoinder of defendants and causes of action—Under the Code of 1882 where a plaint was presented which was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action the Judge to whom the plaint was presented might return it for amendment under s 53 If the plaint having been returned for amendment was not amended it might be rejected under sec 54 cl (d) If the defect was not noticed when the plaint was presented but was brought to the notice of the Court at a later stage the Court might on the application of the plaintiff and on such terms as to costs as the Court thought proper permit the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit against those defendants who were not interested in the cause of action in respect of which he elected to proceed and grant leave to bring a fresh suit or suits against them (c) [O 23 r 1] or allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint by striking out the names of those defendants and making consequential amendments Where leave to amend was granted to the plaintiff and the plaintiff did not amend within the time fixed by the Court and the suit was dismissed the appellate Court might confirm the decree if it found that the suit was multifarious (d) As to the procedure to be followed under the present Code see notes to r 7 below

Where the defendants object to the frame of a suit on the ground that the suit is multifarious but the objection is overruled and a decree is passed for the plaintiff and the defendants appeal from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be multifarious the appellate Court even if it finds the suit to be multifarious should not interfere with the decree unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case This is the effect of s 99 which declares inter alia that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action where such misjoinder does not affect the merits of the case The words italicized are new They did not occur in the corresponding s 578 of the Code of 1882 They have been inserted in s 99 to supersede the practice followed by the Courts under the old Code Under that Code where a decree was passed for the plaintiffs in a suit which was bad for multifariousness the course adopted by the appellate Court was either to reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit (e) or to sustain the decree of the lower Court as against a particular set of defendants in respect of the causes of action in which they were jointly interested and grant permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit against the other defendants with liberty to bring a fresh suit or suits against them (f) Such a course would not have been necessary had the Court held that a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action was an irregularity such as could be cured by s 578 But it was held that the section did not apply to a misjoinder of this kind and that even if it did apply the misjoinder should be regarded as a defect that must affect the merits of the case within the meaning of that section (g) The insertion of the words on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action in s 99 makes it quite clear that the appellate Court should not interfere with a decree if the only objection to the decree is that of multifariousness unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case

Two or more defendants and one cause of action—Every case of multifariousness presupposes more than one cause of action Hence where there is only one cause of action there can be no multifariousness

Suits held not to be multifarious

1 A alleging that his brother B mortgaged his (A s) share in his father s property to C without his knowledge and consent and that C was in possession as mortgagee sues B and C for a declaration of title to his share of the property and for possession of the share The suit is not bad for multifariousness for there are no two causes of action but only one namely the infringement of A s right of ownership by B The mortgage and dispossession are both acts evidencing the infringement of A s right Indur Kuar v Gur Prasad (1889) 11 All. 33 Mazhar Ali v Sajjad Husain (1902) 24 All 358 Kubra Jan v Ram Bali (1908) 30 All. 560

2 A sells three properties by private contract to B After the sale to B all the three properties are attached in execution of a decree held by C against A and they are sold in execution to D E and F respectively A suit by B against A (the vendor) C (the decree holder) and D E and F (execution purchasers) to set aside the execution sale is not bad for multifariousness Haranund v Prosunno Chunder (1883) 9 Cal. 763 Gunami v Ram Charan (1878) 1 All. 5[illegible]

Note—In the Calcutta case cited above Garth C J said The plaintiff has but one object namely to establish his private purchase as against the claim in execution and the defendants who contest his claim have but one defence which is common to them all viz that the plaintiff's purchase is invalid

Unnecessary parties added as defendants—Where persons who are not necessary parties are joined as defendants they should not be reckoned as parties in considering whether or not the suit is bad for multifariousness A and B are two co sharers of a village A and B sell their respective shares to C by two separate deeds of sale D alleging that he is entitled to pre empt the property sues A B and C for pre emption Here the suit is not bad for multifariousness for A and B being vendors they are not necessary parties to a suit for pre emption. The suit is really against the vendee C (h)

Suit for ejectment by real owner against holders under derivative titles from a trespasser as the common source—In a suit for possession all persons claiming by derivative titles from a trespasser as the common source may be joined as defendants A obtains a lease of a piece of land from B and enters into possession of the land. Subsequently B ignoring the lease lets the land in separate portions and by separate leases to C D and E A sues B C D and E to eject them from the land. The suit is not bad for multifariousness. In this as in every action of ejectment there is but one cause of action namely dispossession It is immaterial that C D and

F claim under different titles The title by which they claim forms no part of the plaintiff s cause of action (i) The case is different if the defendants do not all claim under the same trespasser Thus if A owns lands and he is dispossessed of one portion by B of another portion by C and of a third portion by D A cannot bring one suit for possession against B C and D (j)

Where two or more persons conspire together to commit a wrong or to commit a breach of several contracts entered into with them separately by the plaintiff they may all be joined as defendants in one suit — The reason is that the plaintiff has in such a case but one cause of action against all the defendants namely a conspiracy to do the act complained of Thus if in ill (2) on p 445 above the seven salt manufacturers had conspired together not to deliver the salt to A A could have brought one suit against them all Similarly if A and B conspire together to assault C C may bring one suit against them for damages for assault (k) Upon the same principle where A obtained a decree against B for possession of certain lands in which 86 persons had distinct and separate tenures and these 86 persons combined together to keep A out of possession and declined to pay the rent to him it was held that A might join the 86 tenants as defendants in one suit for a declaration of his proprietary right to the lands (l) But separate suits should be brought if there i no collusion or combination between the tenants (m)

Two or more plaintiffs two or more defendants and two or more causes of action —In such a case the plaintiffs must be jointly interested in the cause of action and the defendants also must be jointly interested in the causes of action The rule says Any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit If the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in the causes of action the suit will be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action If the plaintiffs are jointly interested in the several causes of action but the defendants are not the suit will be bad for multifariousness And if neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants are jointly interested in the causes of action the suit will be bad for a double misjoinder namely misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action and misjoinder of defendants and causes of action Thus if A agrees to sell and deliver salt to B and C agrees to sell and deliver salt to D and B and D sue A and C for damages for breach of the contracts entered into with them respectively the suit is bad for a double misjoinder Neither plaintiff has any inte est in the cause of action of the other nor has either defendants any interest in the cause of action against the other But if two contracts are entered into each between B and D of the one part and A and C of the other part B and D may bring one suit against A and C on the two contracts

Jurisdiction —Where a plaintiff combines several causes of action against the same defendant in one suit the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit depends on the value of the aggregate subject matters (n) See sub r (2)

Proviso to the Rule—The proviso to the rule enables a plaintiff to claim in one suit redemption or foreclosure and possession (c)

Leave of Court—Objection as to misjoinder—Leave should be obtained before the plaint is filed (d) But the leave under this rule is not a condition precedent to jurisdiction and it may therefore be granted on good cause shown even after the institution of the suit (e) Under s 44 of the Code of 1882 it was held that an objection that the plaintiff had joined together claims which under that section could not be joined together without the leave of the Court should be taken in the Court of first instance and that if it was not so taken it should be regarded as waived and it should not be entertained by the Court of appeal (f) Under this Code the objection should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement if it is not so taken it will be deemed to have been waived (r 7 below) And even if the objection is taken in time and disallowed the appellate Court should not interfere with the decree in appeal merely on the ground that claims which ought not to be joined under this rule have been joined in one suit unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case (s 99 above)

Where a claim cannot be joined with a claim for the recovery of immovable property without the leave of the Court it is optional with the plaintiff either to obtain the leave and bring one suit in respect of both the claims or to bring separate suits in respect of each of them The plaintiff is not confined to the first only of these two courses (g)

Counterclaim—This rule applies to a counterclaim as well as to an original action (h)

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order under this rule rejecting an application for leave to join a claim with a claim for the recovery of immovable property (i) See s 99 above

5 [S 44 R S C O 18, r 5] No claim by or against an executor, administrator, or heir, as such, shall be joined with claims by or against him personally, unless the last mentioned claims are alleged to arise with reference to the estate in respect of which the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued as executor, administrator or heir, or such as he was entitled to, or liable for, jointly with the deceased person whom he represents

Claims by or against executor administrator or heir

Scope of the rule—This rule provides that no claim by a person in his representative character shall be joined in the same suit with claims by him personally nor shall claims against a person in his representative character be joined with claims against him personally—

(2) unless he was entitled to or liable for those claims jointly with the deceased person whom he represents

(b) A dies leaving a will of which B is the executor By his will A directs B to continue his business The executor purchases for the purposes of A s business certain goods from C in his own name C may in such a case sue B for the price of the goods and he may claim the price against B personally or in the alternative against him as executor The reason is that the personal claim against B arises with reference to the estate of which he is the executor But if B purchased certain goods from C as executor in the course of the administration of A s estate and other goods under a separate contract altogether in his own name and expressly for the purpo e of his own business C cannot join both claims against B in one suit (k)

Heir as such —An heir may sue or be sued in his p rsonal capacity or he may sue or be sued in his representative capacity [see notes to O 7 r 4] The words claim by an heir as such in th s rule refer to a claim by him in his representative capacity that is as representing the estate of the deceased whose heir he claims to be (l)

This rule does not apply to cases of misjoinder but to cases where several causes of action have been properly joined in one suit and the causes of action so joined cannot be conveniently tried together (n) See notes to r 3 One plaintiff one defendant and two or more causes of action.

Objections as to misjoinder of causes of action—This rule is new It places objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action on the same footing as objections on the ground of non joinder and misjoinder of parties [O 1 r 13] Such objections must be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and any such objection not so taken is to be deemed to have been waived (o) Sec 99 provides that no decree shall be reversed or varied on account of any misjoinder of causes of action not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court

Under the Code of 1882 when a plaint was presented which was bad for misjoinder of causes of action it could be returned for amendment under s 53 at any time before the settlement of issues if the plaint was not amended it could be rejected under s 54 cl (d) These provisions have not been re enacted in this Code The Court however may under this Code allow an amendment under O 6 r 17 if the plaintiff applies for it It may also direct the plaintiff under the same rule to amend the plaint on the application of the defendant or where there are two or more defendants on the application of any one of them O 6 r 18 deals with failure to amend after order

As under the old Code so under this Code the Court may where a suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action direct the plaintiffs to elect as to which of them shall proceed with the suit and where a suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action direct them to elect against which defendants they will proceed and direct all necessary amendments to be made within a time to be prescribed by the Court If the plaintiff does not comply with the order and amend the plaint the Court may stay the action

The misjoinder of causes of action referred to in this rule is not only the misjoinder contemplated by r 3 above but also that contemplated by rr 4 and 5 above

ORDER III

Recognized Agents and Pleaders

Appearance etc may be in person by recognized agent or by pleader

1 [S] Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent, or by a pleader appearing, applying or acting on his behalf

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person

Amendments—The words appearing applying or acting were substituted for the words duly appointed to act by the Code of Civil Procedure (Second Amendment) Act 1926

Appearing applying or acting—These words as stated above have been substituted for the words duly appointed to act which occurred in the original rule The changes made in rule 4 below provide for the various purposes for which a pleader may be appointed The words duly appointed to act appear in the proviso to the amended r 4 (5) below See notes to r 4 below Pleaders appointed to act and pleaders engaged only to plead

Appearance—If a recognized agent although able to do so does not conduct the case on behalf of his principal his mere presence in Court is not an appearance in the suit within the meaning of r 6 or r 8 of O 9 (p) See O 9 below and notes to O 9 r 9 Meaning of Appearance

Appearance by party in person—See O 5 r 3

Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis—Such an application cannot be made by a recognized agent (q) See O 33 r 3

2 [S 37] The recognised agents of parties by whom such appearances, applications and acts may be made or done are—

Recognized agents

(a) persons holding powers of attorney, authorizing them to make and do such appearances, applications and acts on behalf of such parties,

(b) persons carrying on trade or business for and in the names of parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court within which limits the appearance, application or act is made or done, in matters connected with such trade or business only, where no other agent is expressly authorized to make and do such appearances, applications and acts

Clause (a) has been amended by the Bombay High Court under s 122—See Appendix IV below Rules made by the High Court of Bombay Where a power of attorney instead of being a general power as required by r 2 (a) as amended by the Bombay High Court was a special power it was held that it was a defect not affecting the merits of the case within the meaning of s 99 and that the decree should not be disturbed in appeal (r)

Clause (b)—Where a plaint is signed and presented by the plaintiff's clerk who has no authority from the plaintiff to carry on business in the plaintiff's name the plaint cannot be said to have been signed by the plaintiff's recognized agent. In such a case the Court may rightly dismiss the suit (s)

3 [S 38] (1) Processes served on the recognised agent of a party shall be as effectual as if the same had been served on the party in person, unless the Court otherwise directs

Service of process on recognised agent

(2) The provisions for the service of process on a party to a suit shall apply to the service of process on his recognised agent

Service of process on recognised agent—A person holding a power of attorney is not bound to accept service of summons he may refuse to do so for he is not bound to act under the power (t)

4 [S 39] (1) No pleader shall act for any person in any Court, unless he has been appointed for the purpose by such person by a document in writing signed by such person or by his recognised agent or by some other person duly authorised by or under a power of attorney to make such appointment

(2) Every such appointment shall be filed in Court and shall be deemed to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by the client or the pleader, as the case may be, and filed in Court, or until the client or the pleader dies or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client O 3

(3) For the purposes of sub rule (2) an application for review of judgment, an application under section 144 or section 152 of this Code, any appeal from any decree or order in the suit and any application or act for the purpose of obtaining copies of documents or return of documents produced or filed in the suit or of obtaining refund of monies paid into the Court in connection with the suit shall be deemed to be proceedings in the suit

(4) The High Court may, by general order, direct that where the person by whom a pleader is appointed is unable to write his name, his mark upon the document appointing the pleader shall be attested by such person and in such manner as may be specified by the order

(5) No pleader who has been engaged for the purpose of pleading only shall plead on behalf of any party, unless he has filed in Court a memorandum of appearance signed by himself and stating—

(a) the names of the parties to the suit,

(b) the name of the party for whom he appears, and

(c) the name of the person by whom he is authorised to appear

Provided that nothing in this sub rule shall apply to any pleader engaged to plead on behalf of any party by any other pleader who has been duly appointed to act in Court on behalf of such party

Old rule —The present rule was substituted for the old rule 4 by the Code of Civil Procedure (Second Amendment) Act 1926 The old rule was as follows —

(1) The appointment of a pleader to make or do any appearance application or act for any person shall be in writing and shall be signed by such person or by his recognized agent or by some other person duly authorized by power of attorney to act in this behalf

(2) Every such appointment when accepted by a pleader shall be filed in Court and shall be considered to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by the client or the pleader as the case may be and filed in Court or until the client or the pleader dies or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client

(3) No advocate of any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act 1861 or of any Chief Court and no advocate of any other High Court who is a barrister shall be required to present any document empowering him to act "

Amendment of the rule—This rule is as amended by the Code of Civil Procedure (Second Amendment) Act 1926 Sub rules (1) and (2) correspond with the previous sub rules (1) and (2) except that in sub rule (2) the words when accepted by a pleader which occurred after the words every such appointment have been omitted. Under the old rule which required an acceptance it was held that the acceptance need not be in writing but that if the rules of the Court required a written acceptance the pleader would not be heard unless it was in writing (u) Sub rules (3) to (5) and the proviso are new

Pleaders appointed to act and pleaders engaged only to plead—Under the rule as it stood originally every pleader had to be appointed by a writing signed by the party or by his recognized agent etc Under the present rule a distinction is drawn between —

(1) a pleader appointed to act in Court

(2) a pleader engaged for the purpose of pleading only and

(3) a pleader engaged to plead by a pleader duly appointed to act in Court

(1) As regards a pleader appointed to act in Court it is provided by sub rule (1) that he cannot act for any person in any Court unless he is appointed by such person by a document in writing signed by such person or his recognized agent etc It is only if the appointment is made by a writing signed by the party etc that he can act and it is only where he is so appointed that he can be said to be duly appointed to act See the proviso to sub rule (5)

When a suit is instituted by a plaintiff through an agent the Court has the power to enquire into the agent s authority (v) A pleader appointed by an official liquidator who has obtained the sanction of the Court to institute a suit is duly appointed within the meaning of this rule though no sanction has been obtained under the Indian Companies Act for the appointment of the pleader (w) Where a party to a suit authorizes an agent by a special power of attorney to appoint a pleader to sign execution petitions a pleader appointed by the agent to support a petition verified by the agent is a pleader duly appointed to act on the party s behalf (x) Omission to file a vakilpatra together with the memorandum of appeal does not prevent the appeal from being an appeal properly perferred (y)

A pleader duly appointed by a person to act in Court on his behalf may appear or make an application or otherwise act for him

(2) A pleader engaged for the purpose of pleading only has to file a memorandum of appearance signed by himself as provided by sub rule (5)

(3) A pleader engaged to plead on behalf of a party by any other pleader who has been duly appointed to act has not to file either a vakalatnamah or a memorandum

Rules of Courts—This rule does not give an absolute right to any practitioner to appear in any Court in any matter he chooses It is subject to the rules governing the admission of different classes of practitioners in different Courts and to rules framed by the High Court (z)

10 [S 73] Service of the summons shall be made by delivering or tendering a copy thereof signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints in this behalf, and sealed with the seal of the Court

Mode of service

Object of service—The object of the service of a summons in whatever way it may be effected (other than substituted service to which other considerations apply) is that the defendant may be informed of the institution of the suit in due time before the date fixed for the hearing (l) See notes to r 17 below Service of summons.

(l) Bhomsh ... v ... Lmab ... (189) 21 Bom 3 5

11 [S 74] Save as otherwise prescribed, where there are more defendants than one, service of the summons shall be made on each defendant

Service on several defendants

Partners — As to service on partners see O 30 r 3

12 [S 75] Wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient

Service to be on defendant in person when practicable or on his agent

13 [S 76] (1) In a suit relating to any business or work against a person who does not reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court from which the summons is issued, service on any manager or agent, who at the time of service, personally carries on such business or work for such person within such limits, shall be deemed good service

Service on agent by whom defendant carried on business

(2) For the purpose of this rule the master of a ship shall be deemed to be the agent of the owner or charterer

Manager or agent personally carrying on business —The manager or agent contemplated by this rule is one who has an initiative and independent discretion albeit subject possibly to general orders for his guidance A mere servant employed to carry out orders or to execute a particular commission or a factor or commission agent who is not identified with the firm for which he acts is not such an agent (l)

14 [S 77] Where in a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immovable property, service cannot be made on the defendant in person, and the defendant has no agent empowered to accept the service, it may be made on any agent of the defendant in charge of the property

Service on agent in charge in suits for immovable property

15 [S 78] Where in any suit the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him

Where service may be on male member of defendant's family

Explanation —A servant is not a member of the family within the meaning of this rule

(l) Goculd v Caeshlal (1880) 4 Bom 416.

Service on adult male member—Where no attempt is made to find the defendant and the summons is served on his son the summons cannot be said to be duly served. The inquiry as to the whereabouts of the defendant must not be perfunctory (m)

16 [S 79] Where the serving officer delivers or tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons

Person served to sign acknowledgment

Refusal to sign acknowledgment—A mere refusal to sign an acknowledgment of service is not an offence under s 173 or s 180 of the Indian Penal Code (n)

17 [S 86] Where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer, after using all due and reasonable deligence, cannot find the defendant, and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and shall then return the original to the Court from which it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed

Procedure when defendant refuses to accept service or cannot be found

The old section—This section corresponds with s 80 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

1 The words after using all due and reasonable diligence are new They give effect to the decisions cited in the notes below under the head After using all due and reasonable diligence

2 The words or carries on business or personally works for gain have been added to remove a doubt which arose under the old section as to whether it was good service to affix a copy of the summons on the outer door of the defendant s place of business (o)

3 The words and the name and address etc at the end of the rule are also new They merely give effect to the existing practice.

( ) Q Emp v Kri h a (1 93) 0 Cal 3 8

(o) Cha basappa v Mai aba (18 0) B H C A C 139

Service of summons—The Code prescribes three modes of service of summons upon a defendant They are as follows —

1 In the first case the summons is served by delivering a copy thereof to the defendant personally or to an agent or other person on his behalf and by obtaining the signature of the person to whom the copy is delivered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons See rr 10—16 and r 18

2 In the second case that is cases mentioned in r 17 service is effected without an order of the Court by affixing a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain and it is for the Court to declare after examination of the serving officer that the summons has been duly served When this mode of service is adopted the provisions of r 19 have to be complied with and the Court concerned has to decide whether the summons has or has not been duly served. See rr 17 and 19

3 In the third case that is cases mentioned in r 20 service is effected after obtaining an order of the Court by affixing a copy of the summons in some conspicuous place in the Court house and also upon some conspicuous part of the house (if any) in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit Service so effected is as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally This is called substituted service See r 20 and the marginal note thereto (p)

Refuses to sign the acknowledgment—Where a defendant refuses to sign the acknowledgment the provisions of the present rule must be complied with namely the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door of the defendant s house otherwise the summons cannot be said to have been duly served (p) Thus if the defendant refuses to sign the acknowledgment it is not sufficient to leave a copy of the summons on a table in his house the copy must be affixed on the outer door of the house (q) In a recent Patna case the Court expressed the opinion that where a copy of the summons is delivered to the defendant under r 10 above and the defendant retains it but refuses to sign an acknowledgment the provisions of this rule do not apply and that it was not necessary to affix a copy of the summons on the door of the defendant s house the reason given being that in such a case the serving officer would have no other copy of the summons to be affixed on the outer door and that the summons must be deemed to be duly served though no copy was so affixed (r) But it has been held by the same High Court that if the copy of the summons is not retained by the defendant the provisions of this rule must be strictly complied with (s)

After using all due and reasonable diligence—The present rule enjoins that in cases where the defendant cannot be found, the mode of service prescribed by this rule should not be resorted to until the serving officer has used all due and reasonable diligence to find the defendant and the defendant could not be found. To justify such service it must be shown that proper efforts were made to find the defendant e g that the serving officer went to the place or places and at the times where and when it was reasonable to expect to find him (t) Thus if a serving officer goes to a defendant s house but does not find him there and the defendant's adult son who is in the house refuses to accept service on behalf of the father these facts by themselves do not justify the officer in resorting to the mode of service prescribed by this rule he must before effecting such service inquire of the son as to where the defendant is and otherwise exercise due and reasonable diligence in finding the defendant (u) When a defendant is temporarily absent from home and is not represented in his house by an agent or male member of his family the summons should be again taken to the defendant's house to be served upon him at the time when enquiries made show that he is likely to be found at home (v) Mere temporary absence of the defendant does not justify the serving officer in affixing a copy of the summons on the door of the defendant's house (w) especially if the serving officer knows where the absent defendant is (x) See notes above under the head The old section

Cannot find the defendant—These words are wide enough to cover the case of a serving officer not being able to obtain access to a purdanashin lady or to deliver or tender a copy of the summons to her (y) See notes to r 19 below and notes also to O 9 r 13 Grounds on which ex parte decree may be set aside

Proof of service—If the plaintiff appears at the hearing of the suit but the defendant does not appear at the hearing the question whether the summons was duly served arises directly for the determination of the Court for the Court cannot proceed ex parte unless it is proved that the summons was duly served [O 9 r 6 (1)] Where a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant and the defendant satisfies the Court which passed the decree that the summons was not duly served upon him the Court may set aside the decree [O 9 r 13]

18 [S 81] The serving officer shall, in all cases in which the summons has been served under rule 16, endorse or annex, or cause to be endorsed or annexed, on or to the original summons, a return stating the time when and the manner in which the summons was served, and the name and address of the person (if any) identifying the person served and witnessing the delivery or tender of the summons

Endorsement of time and manner of service

Form of return—See Appendix B to Schedule I Form No 11 The said Form has been altered in certain respects by the Chief Court of the Punjab see Appendix VII below

19 [S 82, 1st para] Where a summons is returned under rule 17, the Court shall, if the return under that rule has not been verified by the affidavit of the serving officer, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching his proceedings, and may make such further inquiry in the matter as it thinks fit, and shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit

Service by registered post—This rule is to be read with s 27 of the General Clauses Act 10 of 1897 by which it is provided that when any document is required by an Act passed after 11th March 1897 to be served by post and the expression used is send [which is the expression used in the present rule] then unless a different intention appears [and no such intention appears in the present rule] the service shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing pre paying and posting by registered post a letter containing the document and unless the contrary is proved to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post Reading the present rule with the said s 27 the High Court of Bombay held in a case in which it appeared that the postal packet enclosing the summons was properly addressed to the defendant and was registered duly stamped and posted but the packet was returned endorsed refused that the Court was entitled to draw the inference indicated in the said s 27 and to hold that there was sufficient service (c) In the earlier cases which arose under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 where a postal packet was returned endorsed refused it was held that the service was not sufficient and that further evidence was necessary before the Court could act upon such endorsement (d) As to these cases however it is to be noted that they were all decided without any reference to s 27 of the General Clauses Act as all except one were decided before that Act came into force and the one decided after that Act came into force was not governed by the provisions of s 27 as that section did not apply to the Code of 1882 which was an enactment passed before 11th March 1897 the date on which the General Clauses Act came into force

The High Court of Bombay has recently held that the Court must allow the defendant a retrial if after a decree has been passed against him on evidence that the summons was served by registered post and returned refused he appears and denies receipt of the packet Macleod C J said Service by registered post is at any time a poor substitute for personal service which is directed by the Court It is allowed to litigants as a matter of convenience (e)

Service within Presidency towns and Rangoon of summons issued by Courts outside

23 [S 85, 2nd para] The Court to which a summons is sent under rule 21 or rule 22 shall, upon receipt thereof, proceed as if it had been issued by such Court and shall then return the summons to the Court of issue, together with the record (if any) of its proceedings with regard thereto

Sufficiency of service—Where a summons has been transmitted by one Court to another for service by the latter and the return made by the Court serving the summons states that the service has been duly effected the presumption will be that the service was sufficient unless the return itself shows the insufficiency (f) Similarly when the return made by the Court serving the summons states that the summons has not been duly served and the summons is returned with that declaration to the Court from which it was issued the presumption is that the service was not sufficient and the Court from which the summons was issued should act upon that presumption unless there is good and strong evidence which comes or is brought to its notice showing that the summons was duly served (g) According to the Calcutta High Court however the Court issuing the summons must not proceed upon any presumption either way but must determine for itself whether the service was sufficient or not the reason given being that the present rule does not require the Court to which the summons is sent for service to make any return touching the sufficiency of service (h) This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Allahabad on grounds of expediency and further on the ground that it ignores the last sentence of rule 19 above which applies not only to the Court issuing the summons but also to the Court to which it is sent for service (i)

ORDER VI

1 [New Cf Jud Act 1873 S 100] "Pleading" shall mean plaint or written statement

Pleading

Introduction of English rules of pleadings—The object of this Order is to introduce into British India the leading rules of pleadings followed in England. The whole of this Order excepting rr 14 and 15 is new The rules comprised in this Order except rr 14 and 15 have been taken most of them from Order 19 and the rest from Order 28 of the English Rules made under the Judicature Acts In one respect however the rigour of the English Rules has been relaxed by providing that the Court may notwithstanding the absence of any specific denial require any fact to be proved by the party who alleges it (see O 8 r 5)

Function of pleadings — The whole object of pleadings is to bring the parties to an issue and the meaning of the rules (relating to pleadings) was to prevent the issue being enlarged, which would prevent either party from knowing when the cause came on for trial what the real point to be discussed and decided was In fact the whole meaning of the system is to narrow the parties to definite issues and thereby to diminish expense and delay especially as regards the amount of testimony required on either side at the hearing (k) To attain this end the plaintiff should state in his plaint all the facts which constitute his cause of action It is not sufficient to allege what may be a ground of action if something else be added which is not stated in the plaint Upon all sound principles of pleading it is necessary to allege what must and not what may be a cause of action (l) The defendant also should state in his written statement the material facts on which he relies for his defence When the result of the pleading on both sides is that a material fact is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other the question thus raised between the parties is called an issue of fact When one party answers his opponent s pleading by stating an objection in point of law the legal question thus raised between the parties is called an issue of law See O 14 r 1

A plaintiff s pleading is his plaint (O 7) A defendant s pleading is his written statement (O 8) In some cases a plaintiff who has filled his plaint may with the leave of the Court file a written statement or the Court may require him to file a written statement In such cases the written statement forms part of the plaintiff s pleadings Again there are cases in which a defendant who has filed his written statement may with the leave of the Court file an additional written statement or the Court may require him to do so In such cases the additional written statement forms part of the defendant s pleadings The plaintiff s written statement and the defendant s additional written statement are called subsequent pleadings See O 8 r 9

Pleading to state material facts and not evidence

2 [New R S C, O 19, r 4] Every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved, and shall, when necessary, be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively Dates, sums and numbers shall be expressed in figures

General rules of pleading —O 6 deals with Pleadings in general O 7 deals with Plaints and O 8 with Written Statements The following is a summary of the rules comprised in this order —

1 State your whole case in your pleading in other words set forth in your pleading all material facts on which you rely for your claim or defence (r 2)

2 State facts and not law (r 2) If any matter of law is set out in your opponent s pleading do not plead to it (m)

3 State the material facts on which you rely and not the evidence by which they are to be proved (rr 2 10 11 12)

4 State material facts only omit immaterial and unnecessary facts. Do not anticipate your opponent s pleading and plead to any matter which is not alleged against you (r 2)

(l) West Rand Central Gold Mining Co v Rex [190] 2 K B 391 400

(m) Richardson v Mayor of Oxford (1 93) H B 1

5 State the facts of your case concisely but with precision (r 2)

6 It is not necessary to allege the performance of any condition precedent an averment of performance is now implied in every pleading (r 6)

7 It is not necessary to set out the whole or any part of a document unless the precise words thereof are necessary It is sufficient to state the effect of the document as briefly as possible (r 9)

8 It is not necessary to allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in your favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon your opponent (r 13)

Fundamental rule—Rule 2 of this Order is the fundamental rule of pleadings When analysed it will be found to require four things —

I Every pleading must state facts and not law

II It must state material facts and material facts only

III It must state only the facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence and not the evidence by which they are to be proved

IV It must state such facts in a concise form

The main object or one of the main objects of this rule is that the one party may know what are the facts on which the other party relies in order that he may be prepared to meet the case (n)

I Every pleading must state facts and not law—A pleading must not set forth a public statute for the Court is bound to take judicial notice of it (o) Nor should parties plead conclusions of law or of mixed law and fact it is for the Court to declare the law arising upon the facts before it The parties should only state the facts on which they rely for their claim or defence

It is bad pleading to allege merely that a right or a duty exists the facts must be set out which give rise to the right or create the duty Thus in a suit for damages for negligence it is not enough for the plaintiff to state that the defendant has been guilty of negligence without showing in what respect he was negligent and how he became bound to use care to prevent injury to others Negligence means a breach of duty to take due care and caution The plaint therefore ought to state facts upon which the supposed duty is founded and the duty to the plaintiff with the breach of which the defendant is charged (p) Similarly it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to aver that the defendant did the act complained of wrongfully unlawfully and improperly or without any justification therefore or right so to do He must state the facts upon which he proposes to rely as showing that the act was done wrongfully or unlawfully Those epithets under the present system of pleading are useless and redundant They add nothing whatever to the plaintiff s case They are merely now epithets of abuse They were formerly in declarations essential because under that form of pleading legal rights were stated for facts but facts alone are stated now (q) Upon like principles it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to say Under and by virtue of a certain deed I am entitled etc He must state the facts which go to show his title (r) In like manner a plaintiff claiming under a donatio mortis causa must state the facts which according to him would constitute it a valid donatio mortis causa it is not sufficient to say that the deceased two days before his death made a good and valid donatio mortis causa to the plaintiff of the property (s) Where a plaintiff claims by inheritance it is not sufficient to say I am the heir at law He must state the particulars showing the links of relationship on which he relies as constituting him such heir (t)

The same principles apply to a defendant s pleading A defendant may not in his written statement say merely I am not liable He must allege facts which show that he is not liable Thus a defendant who claims privilege in a suit for defamation must not plead merely that he published the words on a privileged occasion He must state the facts which give rise to the privilege (u)

II Every pleading must state material facts and material facts only—To begin with a party should set out in his pleading all material facts on which he relies for his claim or defence What particulars are to be stated must depend on the facts of each case But it is absolutely essential that the pleading not to be embarrassing to the defendant should state those facts which will put the defendants on their guard and tell them what they have to meet when the case comes on for trial (v) If a party omits to plead a material fact he will not be allowed to give evidence of that fact at the trial unless the Court gives him leave to amend his pleadings under r 17 below If parties were held strictly to their pleadings under the present system they ought not to be allowed to prove at the trial as a fact on which they would have to rely in order to support their case any fact which is not stated in the pleadings (w) Thus if A sues B for specific performance of a contract alleged to have been signed by B s agent and the only fact stat d in B s written statement as a ground of defence is that the alleged agent was of unsound mind and therefore incompetent to contract B will not be allowed to prove at the hearing that the alleged agent had in fact no authority to sign the contract B ought to have pleaded want of authority in his written statement if he intended to rely upon it for his defence Nor will B be allowed to amend his written statement in such a case under rule 17 below for if a defendant were to be at lib rty to put in a defence inconsi t nt with the rules of pleading and then at the trial get the case to stand over in order to put in a new defence the consequences might be very pr judical (x)

Matters affecting damages—The present rule provides that every pleading should contain and contain only material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence as the case may b That is to say a plaint should contain only those material facts on which the plaintiff relies for his claim and a written statement should contain only those material facts on which the defendant relies for his defence Does this mean that the plaint should be confined to those facts only which constitute the plaintiff s cause of action and that the written statement should be confined to those facts only which constitute the defendant s defence? It has been held as regards a plaintiff s claim that the words material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim are not confined to those facts which are essential to the plaintiff s cause of actions but include any fact which the plaintiff is entitled to prove at the hearing Thus facts which merely tend to increase the amount of damages are not essential to the cause of action but they certainly are facts which the plaintiff is entitled to prove at the hearing as matters in aggravation of damages Such facts are therefore material facts within the meaning of this rule and a plaintiff has to state them in his plaint (y) As observed by Brett L J in Phillipps v Phillipps ( ) the words of the rule are not the facts which will be necessary to support the cause of action they are the material facts on which the party relies for his claim In Millington v Loring (a) which was a suit for damages for breach of a contract to marry the plaint after alleging the promise to marry in the first paragraph and the breach thereof in the second went on to allege in the third paragraph that the plaintiff relying upon the said promise permitted the defendant to debauch and carnally know her whereby the defendant infected her with a venereal disease Analysing the above plaint it may be stated that the first and second paragraphs stated facts that were essential to the cause of action i e facts relating to the making of the contract and facts relating to the breach of the contract being facts which constitute the cause of action in a suit for damages for the breach of a contract But the facts stated in the third paragraph were not essential to the cause of action Nevertheless they were material facts within the meaning of the rule for the plaintiff was entitled to prove them as matters in aggravation of damages and it was held that they were properly set forth in the plaint Turning now to the defence in a suit for damages the rule laid down in Wood v Durham (b) is that a defendant is not in general entitled to plead in his defence matters in mitigation of damages The ground of the decision in that case is that such matters do not constitute any defence to an action and a defendant can under the rule allege only those material facts on which he relies for his defence As to Millington v Loring it was said that it was a case where there was a good cause of action of a double character stated there were damages claimed by reason of an alleged breach of promise of marriage but there was far more because part of the cause of action was that by reason of that the plaintiff had been ill through the seduction by the defendant who had ruined her character and has infected her with a bad disease One may be permitted to doubt whether illness through seduction and infection with disease formed part of the cause of action Moreover the decision in Millington v Loring has been followed in a case later than Wood v Durham where it could not be said that there was a cause of action of a double character (c) However this may be it is to be remarked that the decision in Wood v Durham turned not only on the construction of the corresponding English rule but on O 21 r 4 which provides in express terms that no denial or defence shall be necessary as to damages claimed or their amount but they shall be deemed to be put in issue in all cases unless expressly admitted O 21 r 4 of the English rules has not been reproduced in the Code Therefore just as the plaintiff may plead any matter in aggravation of damages as to which he could give evidence at the trial so the defendant may plead any matter in mitigation of damages as to which he could give evidence at the trial See notes to O 8 r 3 Except damages

Facts not yet material to a case—The pleadings should only contain such facts as are material at the present stage of the suit It is not proper to anticipate the answer of the adversary To do so is like leaping before one comes to the stile (d) It is no part of the statement of claim [plaint in our pleadings] to anticipate the defence and to state what the plaintiff would have to say in answer to it That would be a return to the old inconvenient system of pleading in Chancery, which ought certainly not to be encouraged when the plaintiff used to allege in his bill imaginary defences of the defendant and make charges in reply to them (e) Thus it is unnecessary in a suit upon a bond to allege that the defendant was of full age when he executed the bond For if he were a minor when he executed the bond it is for him to prove it it need not be denied by anticipation (f) Similarly a defendant should not plead to any matter which is not alleged against him Thus if a defendant is sued for slander the only way to meet the plaintiff s claim is to plead (1) that the words in question were not spoken and published

2 or (2) that they were spoken and published and are true or (3) that they were spoken and published and are privileged. If instead of so doing he pleads that he did not say the words alleged in the plaint but that he said something else and that the something else which he said was true and spoken on a privileged occasion the defence will be struck out under r 16 below as one embarrassing the fair trial of the suit (g)

III Every pleading must state facts and not the evidence by which they are to be proved —Every pleading must contain a statement of the material facts on which the party pleading relies but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved It is an elementary rule of pleading that when a state of facts is relied on, it is enough to allege it simply without setting out the subordinate facts which are the means of producing it or the evidence sustaining the allegation (h) No doubt evidence also consists of facts but there is a convenient nomenclature to distinguish the two The material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence are called facta probanda The evidence or the facts by means of which they are to be proved are called facta probantia Every pleading should contain only facta probanda and not facta probantia The distinction is taken in the very rule itself between the facts on which the party relies and the evidence to prove those facts Erle C.J expressed it in this way He said there were facts that might be called the allegata probanda the facts which ought to be proved and they were different from the evidence which was adduced to prove those facts And it was upon that expression of opinion of Erle C.J that rule 4 [of the English rules corresponding to the present rule] was drawn. The facts which ought to be stated are the material facts on which the party pleading relies (i) Thus where a suit is brought against an Insurance Company on a policy on the life of A and one of the conditions of the policy is that it should be void if the insured committed suicide the Company should only plead if the defence is that A committed suicide that A died by his own hand It is wrong to state in the written statement that A had been melancholy for weeks that he bought a pistol and shot himself with it These facts are merely evidence (facta probantia) facts by means of which the factum probandum namely suicide is to be proved (j) Similarly it is wrong to set out in the pleading admissions made by the opponent for admissions are only evidence (k) Thus where a plaintiff alleged that certain windows of his were ancient and the defendant stated in his defence that the plaintiff had in a former action admitted that they were not ancient the allegation was struck out (l) Upon the same principle where the facts in a pedigree are facts to be relied upon as facts to establish the right or title they must be set out but where the pedigree is the means of proving the facts relied on as facts by which the right or title is to be established then the pedigree is evidence that need not be set out (m)

Rules 10 11 and 12 of this Order are special applications of the general principle laid down in this rule

IV Every pleading must state material facts in a concise form.—To attain this end the forms in Appendix A when applicable and where they are not applicable forms of the like character as nearly as may be should be used for all pleadings (see r 3 below) At the same time the rules given above under the head General rules of pleading should be borne in mind But the pleader should not sacrifice precision to conciseness. For as observed by Kay J although pleadings must now be concise they must also be precise (n) In fact rule 4 expressly required

Alternative and inconsistent allegations—The rule now under consideration does not prohibit inconsistent pleadings A person may rely upon one set of facts if he can succeed in proving them and he may rely upon another set of facts if he can succeed in proving them and it appears to me to be far too strict a construction of this Order to say that he must make up his mind on which particular line he will put his case when perhaps he is very much in the dark (o) The rules as to joinder of defendants (O 1 r 3) and causes of action (O 2 r 3) as also the rules as to the reliefs that may be claimed by a plaintiff (O 7 rr 7 8) clearly show that either party may allege in his pleadings two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claim relief thereunder in the alternative (p) A plaintiff may rely upon several different rights alternatively although they may be inconsistent (q) But then as to each of those he ought to set out the facts upon which he would have to rely as facts to maintain that right (r) So too a defendant may by his written statement raise as many distinct and separate and therefore inconsistent defences as he may think proper (s) But this is subject to the provision contained in rule 16 below which provides that the Court may strike out any matter in a plaint or written statement which may embarrass the fair trial of the suit (t) A pleading however is not embarrassing within the meaning of rule 16 merely because it sets up inconsistent sets of facts (u) Hence it cannot be struck out solely on that ground To go to the length of saying that no inconsistent pleading can be pleaded appears to me not warranted by the rules and contrary to the established practice of the Courts (v) It must however be noted that If alternative cases are alleged the facts ought not to be mixed up leaving the [other party] to pick out the facts applicable to each case but facts ought to be distinctly stated so as to show on what facts each alternative of the relief sought is founded (w) [See O 7 r 8] If the facts are so mixed up that they may embarrass the fair trial of the suit the Court may strike out matters which may embarrass the trial What the rules prohibit are not inconsistent pleadings but pleadings which set up inconsistent and embarrassing claims and inconsistent and embarrassing defences See notes to O 7 r 7 Alternative relief

4 [New R S C, O 19, r 6] In all cases in which the party pleading relies on any misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default, or undue influence and in all other cases in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms aforesaid, particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleading

Particulars to be given where necessary

Object of particulars— Although pleadings must now be concise they must also be precise (y) For this purpose all necessary particulars must be embodied in the pleadings Where a plaint contains sufficient averments and indicates with reasonable precision what the claim sued on is the suit should not fail by reason of the omission or incorrect description of any particular (z) If the particulars stated in the pleadings are not sufficiently specific the other party may apply for further and better particulars under the next rule The object of particulars is to prevent surprise at the trial by informing the opposite party what case he has to meet to define and narrow the issues to be tried and so save unnecessary expense (a) Particulars supplement pleadings which would otherwise be too vague and general and ensure a fair trial by giving notice of the case intended to be set up (b) What particulars are to be stated must depend upon the facts of each case (c) As a general rule it may be stated that as much certainty and particularity must be insisted on as is reasonable having regard to the circumstances and to the nature of the acts themselves To insist upon less would be to relax old and intelligible principles To insist upon more would be the vainest pedantry (d) At the same time the distinction between particulars and evidence must be steadily kept in view The Courts have uniformly endeavoured to prevent the plaintiff or the defendant as the case may be from prying into the brief of his opponent for finding out what is to be the evidence which is to be produced at the trial On the other hand the Courts have uniformly said that the plaintiff or the defendant is entitled to be told any and every particular which will enable him properly to prepare his case for the trial so that he may not be taken by surprise (e) That is to say whilst particulars may be ordered to prevent surprise and to inform the opposite party of the case he has to meet particulars are not ordered of the mode in which it may be proposed to prove the case set up in the pleading (f) To use the phraseology of r 2 above particulars will be ordered of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence but not of the evidence by which those facts are to be proved Thus a defendant is not entitled to know the names of the plaintiff s witnesses for that is to require particulars of the evidence by which the plaintiff s case is to be proved. But where the names of witnesses form part of the material facts constituting a party s case he is bound to state them in his pleading and if he does not an order may be made requiring him to disclose the names (g) If the particulars are those that he ought to give he cannot refuse to do so merely on the ground that his answer will disclose the names of the witnesses he proposes to call (h) This may be explained by an illustration A deals in drugs bearing the registered trade-mark Herbalin B uses the word Herbaline on drugs manufactured by him A sues B for infringement of his trade mark alleging in the plaint that the use of his trade mark by B is calculated to induce and had in fact induced diverse persons to purchase B's goods as and for A's goods B applies for particulars of the names and addresses of the diverse persons B is entitled to the particulars for the names in this case form part of the material facts which constitutes A's case The whole question in such a case is has the defendant induced diverse persons to buy his goods as and for those of the plaintiff (i)

Fraud and coercion —Where fraud is charged against the defendant it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges It is not enough to use such general words as fraud deceit or machinations General allegations however strong may be the words in which they are stated are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice (j) Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud but no particulars of the fraud are given in the plaint the Court may allow the plaint to be amended or it may reject the plaint (k) [see O 6 r 17 and O 7 r 11] A charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid and when one kind of fraud is charged another kind of fraud cannot upon failure of proof be substituted for it (l) Nor is it proper for the appellate Court to entertain a case of fraud other than the one specifically alleged in the pleadings (m) The same rules apply when coercion is charged in the plaint (n)

If the particulars of fraud stated in the plaint are not sufficiently specific the defendant may apply for further particulars under the next rule Thus where it is alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendants have made false entries in the plaintiff's books for the purpose of defrauding them the plaintiffs may be directed to furnish particulars specifying the entries charged to be false and the nature of their objection to each item (o) See notes to rule 5 below Discovery before particulars ill 1 and notes to O 6 r 17 Amendment by adding plea of fraud.

Misrepresentation —Where it is alleged in the plaint that the defendant represented to the plaintiff etc it should be stated whether the representation was verbal or in writing (p) It is not enough in an action to restrain infringement of a trade mark to allege that diverse persons were induced by the acts of the defendant to purchase his goods as and for those of the plaintiff The plaintiff should state in the plaint particulars of the names and addresses of those diverse persons (q)

Breach of trust —Where breach of trust is charged the pleading must specify the acts constituting the alleged breach of trust It is not enough to say that the defendant had in various ways misapplied rent and profits of leaseholds which he had received on behalf of the plaintiff and had committed breaches of trust (r)

Other cases in which particulars may be necessary —

Misconduct —Where the dismissal of a servant or an agent is justified on the ground of misconduct the party so justifying must specify the acts of misconduct (s)

Negligence —Where negligence or contributory negligence is charged full details must be given of the acts on which the party pleading relies as constituting negligence (t)

Agreement—Where an agreement is alleged the pleading should state the date of the agreement the names of the parties to it and whether it was in writing or verbal (u) If it is an implied agreement it should appear from what facts or circumstances it is to be implied (see r 12 below)

Defamation—In an action for slander the plaintiff must give particulars of the names of the persons to whom the alleged slander was made (v)

In an action for libel where the charge made against the plaintiff in the alleged libel is general in its nature a defendant who pleads a justification must state in his pleading the facts on which he relies in support of his justification (w) But where in an action of libel the defendant relies on the defence of fair comment and pleads it in the form now commonly known as the rolled up plea—i e In so far as the said words consist of allegations of fact the said words are in their nature and ordinary meaning true in substance and in fact and in so far as the said words consist of expression of opinion they are fair comment made in good faith and without malice for the benefit of the public upon the said facts which are a matter of public interest the Court will not order the defendant to specify which of the words complained of he relies on as being statements of facts and which as being expressions of opinion. Nor will the Court order him to give particulars of the facts on which he relies as being the basis of his comments if the plea (as above) limits those facts to the said facts for the plaintiff is thereby given all the information on the subject that he can require (x) A sends a book of which he is the author to B for a review B in reviewing the book prints and publishes among other statements the following A is by his own confession a most barefaced liar A sues B for damages for libel B justifies pleading the truth of the alleged libel B must specify in his pleading the passage in A s work on which he relies in support of the defence of justification (y)

Accounts—Where a plaintiff claims merely to have a general account taken he need not give particulars as to the items But it is otherwise if the plaintiff claims a definite amount instead of an account In the latter case the plaintiff must give particulars as to the items of which it is composed (z)

Where a lump sum is claimed—Where a plaintiff claims a lump sum the defendant is entitled to particulars of the items composing such sum (a) So also where a plaintiff gives credit for a lump sum and sues for the balance (b)

Particulars of defence—The general principles upon which the Courts act in requiring particulars to be given of allegations or matters stated in plaints are applicable equally to defences and the rules relating to the giving of particulars are in general applicable to all pleadings though from the nature of the case the occasion for particulars arises somewhat less frequently in regard to defences than in regard to claims. Thus where a defence consists of traverses or denials of allegations in the claim so that the defendant is not taking upon himself the onus of proving any substantive facts but is only denying or requiring proof of those alleged by the plaintiff the occasion for particulars does not arise but where he pleads affirmatively or sets up facts to be proved in answer to the plaintiff s case he may be and in general is as much under obligation to give particulars as if he were alleging such or similar matters in a plaint (c) For instance if a defendant sets up a defence of payments made he has to give particulars of th dates and amounts of such payments So if he justifies a libel he must state th facts fully in his pleadings or give particulars (d) Similarly where he alleges that he released from or exonerated and discharged from the performance of his contract h must in his written statement give sufficient information to his opponent as to how an when he was so released or discharged [Bullen and Leake Precedents of Pleadings 6th ed 532 533] But where the onus of e tabli hing a positive or negative allegation lies on th plaintiff the Court will not order the def ndant to give particulars of his traverse of tha allegation. Thus where the plaintiff alleged that the committee of the Stock Exchang in declining to re elect him as a member of the exchange did not act bonâ fide fairly reasonably or judicially in coming to the conclusion they did and the committee i their defence alleged that they acted bonâ fide and honestly it was held that the onu of proving that the committee had not acted bonâ fid being on the plaintiff he was no entitled to particulars of the facts or grounds upon which the committee based the decision (e)

Failure to give particulars after order—If the order directing a party t give particulars is not obeyed then if the plaintiff is in default he should have h action stayed and if the defendant is in default his defence should be struck out (f)

5 [New R S C O 19, r 7] A further and bette statement of the nature of the claim o defence, or further and better particular of any matter stated in any pleading may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to cost and otherwise, as may be just

Further and better statement of particulars

Application for particulars— The object of particulars is to preven surprise at the trial and to limit the inquiry at the trial to the matters set out in th particulars So I think particulars ought to be encouraged They tend to narrow th issues (g) If a party does not state in his pleading all the particulars required b r 4 the other party may apply under this rule for further and better particulars I the English practice is to be followed here the application need not be supported b any affidavit except perhaps in a special case (h)

When application should be made—As a general rule a defendant wh claims particulars should apply for them with reasonable promptitude (i) and befor putting in his defence but he does not by putting in his defence waive his right to part culars (j) Indeed in a proper case the Court may order an application for particulars t stand over till a written statement has been put in to enable the Court to know what th points raised by the defence are as where the defendant is the plaintiff s agent and th particulars in question are all in the knowledge of the defendant but not in the know ledge of the plaintiff (k)

be given before particulars are delivered. There is no hard and fast rule as to the class of cases in which particulars should precede discovery or discovery be ordered before particulars, but the Judge must exercise a reasonable discretion in every case after carefully looking at all the facts and taking into account any special circumstances (l). The result of the authorities appears to be that where the party pleading does not know the facts necessary to enable him to give the particulars but his opponent knows them, the party applying for particulars may be ordered to give discovery before the party pleading is required to deliver particulars, and the application for particulars may be postponed till after discovery. It is good practice and good sense that where the defendant knows the facts and the plaintiffs do not the defendant should give discovery before the plaintiffs deliver particulars (m).

1. Suit by principal against agent for accounts charging agent with fraud.—A employs B to purchase goods as his agent at the lowest possible price. A sues B for an account alleging in the plaint that B had purchased goods at prices higher than the current prices and had secretly received commission from the vendor. The charges against B are stated in general terms, no particulars being given. A is unable to state the particulars of the fraud charged until he sees B's books. A is entitled to inspection of B's books before he can be called upon to deliver particulars of the fraud (n).

2. Suit by a wife's executor against husband.—A, who is the executor of J, sues B, J's husband, to recover from him all the furniture and other chattels purchased by J with her separate income and included in an inventory of all the goods in B's house made sometime before J's death. B applies for particulars of the furniture. He is not entitled to the particulars until he declares by an affidavit which of the articles comprised in the inventory belonged to his wife. "Where the plaintiffs are executors who do not know and the defendant a person who does know, it is right that discovery should come first" (o).

3. Suit by a colliery company against a colliery merchant.—A colliery company sues R, a coal merchant, for damages for fraudulently passing off coal not gotten from the company's mines as coal gotten from the company's mines. The plaintiffs in their plaint give one specific instance of fraud and allege that "on divers other occasions" the defendant had taken orders from "divers other persons" for coal to be supplied from the company's mines and fraudulently sold coal not purchased from the plaintiff as coal gotten from the company's mines. R applies for particulars of the names and dates. The company then applies for inspection of R's books. The company is entitled to discovery before delivering particulars. Chitty J. said: "Having regard to the circumstances that many of these alleged frauds are within the defendant's means of knowledge and are not within the knowledge of the plaintiffs I think discovery ought to precede particulars" (p).

The practice followed in the above cases was sought to be applied in a libel case where A sued B for calling him a "charity swindler" and "imposter" and B pleaded justification and, when called upon to give particulars of the charge, said that he could not unless he was allowed inspection of A's books of account. The Court held that B was not entitled to discovery before he had delivered particulars. Kay L.J. said: "To apply this practice to the case of a libel would be to sanction the publication of a libel when the libeller knew no facts justifying the libellous statement because he believed he could by the process of discovery elicit such facts" (q).

Objections to particulars —

1 A applies for particulars from B under this rule It is a valid objection to the application that the particulars applied for by A relate to the mode in which B s case is to be proved and not to material facts constituting B s case See notes to r 4 above Object of particulars

2 Particulars will only be ordered of material facts constituting a party s case but not of any immaterial allegation (r)

4 A applies for particulars from B under this rule It is no objection to the application that A must know the true facts of the case better than B (s)

5 Where a party from whom particulars are sought is unable to give the particulars without laborious inquiry the practice is to make an order for the best particulars the party can give (t) This is usually the case where the party fills a representative character (u)

Upon such terms as to costs or otherwise —Thus an order may be made directing that unless particulars are delivered within a certain time the suit shall be dismissed (v)

Amending or delivering further particulars —Where a party who has delivered particulars under an order afterwards desires to amend them or to deliver further particulars the proper course for him is to obtain an order giving him leave to do so (w) And leave will in general be granted where the amendment will cause no injury to the opposite party except such as can be sufficiently compensated for by costs (x) Leave to amend may be refused where it is sought to introduce a new cause of action (y) or to add to the amount claimed after the defendant has paid into Court the full amount originally claimed ( ) An application to amend particulars will as a rule be refused if made at the trial of the suit (a) See s 153 and r 17 of this Order

Neither party need allege the performance of any condition precedent.—A agrees to build a house for B at certain rates specified in the contract. It is a condition of the agreement that payment to A should only be made upon a certificate signed by B's architect as to the amount due. A demands payment upon completion of the building, but B refuses to pay. A sues B claiming Rs 5,000. Here the obtaining of the architect's certificate is a condition precedent to A's right of action. Under the present rule it is not necessary for A expressly to aver in his plaint that he has obtained the architect's certificate. Such averment, the rule says, shall be implied in his pleading. The rule further provides that if B intends to contest the fulfilment of the condition precedent, he must distinctly specify the condition precedent in his written statement. He must plead that the architect has not certified the amount claimed in the suit. If B does not plead the non-performance of the condition, it will be presumed that the condition has been duly performed. If B pleads non-performance, the burden of proving due performance will be on A.

A condition precedent, it must be observed, does not strictly speaking form part of the cause of action. Thus in the case put above A's cause of action consists of the making of the contract and of the breach thereof by B. The condition of obtaining the architect's certificate is but an additional formality introduced by the express agreement of the parties suspending A's right to sue until the condition has been performed.

The Lahore High Court has held that in a suit for damages for breach of contract the plaintiff is dispensed by this rule from pleading his readiness and willingness to perform his part of the contract (b).

History of the rule.—This rule is a reproduction of O. 19, r. 14 of the English Rules. Before the year 1852 it was a recognized rule of English pleadings that the plaintiff should allege expressly the performance of each necessary condition precedent to the rights claimed. Then came the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, which modified the earlier practice by enabling the plaintiff to aver performance of conditions precedent generally. For this purpose the form in use was: "all conditions were performed, and all things happened, and all times elapsed necessary to entitle the plaintiff to have the said promise performed by the defendant and to maintain his action for the breach thereof hereinafter alleged." The present rule does away with the necessity of even a general averment of performance of condition precedent. A plaintiff need not now allege the performance of any condition precedent. It is for the defendant to object if he intends to dispute the performance of any condition precedent.

Distinctly.—This rule requires that where a party intends to contest the performance of any condition precedent, he must distinctly specify the condition precedent in his pleading. An allegation in general terms that there was an express condition ... is not enough. The pleading must state the terms of the condition, the names of the parties to it, and whether it was in writing or verbal (c).

Departure

7. [New R. S. C., O. 19, r. 16.] No pleading shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same.

Departure in pleading.—This rule provides against what is called "a departure in pleading." It is a reproduction of O. 19, r. 16 of the English Rules. Its importance in this country is not likely to be so great as in England where the practice is for each party in turn to state his own case and answer that of his opponent before the hearing Not that the Code does not recognize subsequent pleadings (see O 8 r 9) but such pleadings are seldom resorted to in this country even in the Presidency towns The general principles on which the system of pleading in England is founded are as follows —

1 The plaintiff by his statement of claim alleges the material facts on which he relies in support of his case.

2 The defendant in answer thereto delivers a defence in which he may take all or any of the following courses —

first he may deny or refuse to admit the facts stated by the plaintiff secondly he may confess or admit them and avoid their effect by answering fresh facts which afford an answer thereto

thirdly he may admit the facts stated by the plaintiff and may raise a question of law as to their legal effect

If the defendant adopts the first or third of these three courses a question of fact or of law is at once raised between the parties

3 If the defendant adopts the second of the three courses the plaintiff may reply—

first by denying the fresh facts alleged by the defendant or secondly by admitting them and alleging other facts which avoid their effect or thirdly by raising a question of law as to their effect.

4 If the plaintiff pleads a reply of the second kind, that is if he replies by way of confession and avoidance the defendant has the same courses open to him in pleading a rejoinder (d) A rejoinder is now seldom pleaded.

5 It is very seldom that further proceedings are taken, but there may be sur rejoinders rebutters and surrebutters

Under the Code a plaintiff commences his suit by presenting a plaint The defendant then puts in his written statement in answer to the plaintiff s claim. There is nothing corresponding to a Reply or Rejoinder in our system of pleadings But the plaintiff may with the leave of the Court tender a written statement and the defendant may with like leave tender an additional written statement (O 8 r 9) The Code of 1882 also contained a similar provision (e) but pleadings in this country seldom go beyond the defendant s written statement

The word pleading at the commencement of this rule refers to subsequent pleadings Thus in England a plaintiff may not raise in his Reply a ground of claim different from that raised in his Statement of Claim nor can he in his Reply set up facts inconsistent with those set up in his Statement of Claim A reply is not the proper place in which to rai e new claims A plaintiff who wi hes to add new claims can do so only by amending the Statement of Claim Similar remarks apply to a defendant s Rejoinder As a plaintiff s Reply must be con istent with his Statement of Claim so a defendant s Rejoinder must be consistent with his Defence Thus if a plaintiff alleges merely a negligent breach of trust in his Statement of Claim the Reply must not assert that the breach of trust was fraudulent (f) Similarly if the Defence alleges that the arbitrators did not make any award the Rejoinder must not assert that the award was not tendered by the proper time for it is one thing not to make an award, and another thing not to tender it when made (g) Upon the same principle a plaintiff who claims rent on the basis of a lease cannot claim the same sum in his Reply as damages for unlawfully holding over for by his Statement of Claim he treats the defendant as his tenant and he cannot turn round in his Reply and say If the defendant is not liable as a tenant he is liable as a trespasser (h)

Denial of contract

8 [New R S C, O 19, r 20] Where a contract is alleged in any pleading, a bare denial of the same by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial in fact of the express contract alleged or of the matters of fact from which the same may be implied, and not as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such contract

Denial of contract—All matters which go to show that the contract sued on is void or unlawful must be specifically pleaded If such matters are not expressly pleaded no evidence thereof can as a rule be given at the trial Thus if A sues B on a contract and B in his written statement merely denies the contract such denial will be taken to mean only that there was in fact no such contract as alleged it will not be construed as a denial of the legality of the contract The result is that if A proves the contract sued upon B will not be allowed to contend at the hearing that the contract was a wagering contract and therefore void B ought to have specifically pleaded in his written statement that the contract was a wagering contract (i) But where at the hearing of a suit the plaintiff s case discloses that the transaction which is the basis of his claim is illegal the Court cannot properly ignore the illegality even if the illegality be not pleaded or relied on by the defendant (j) No Court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made the instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded the illegality or whether he has not If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proves the illegality the Court ought not to assist him (k) Note that an agreement by way of wager is void but not illegal [see Indian Contract Act 1872 ss 23 and 30] See O 8 r 2

Effect of document to be stated

9 [New R S C O 19 r 21] Wherever the contents of any document are material, it shall be sufficient in any pleading to state the effect thereof as briefly as possible, without setting out the whole or any part thereof, unless the precise words of the document or any part thereof are material

Effect of document to be stated—This rule directs what should be the proper method of pleading where a material fact (r 2) is evidenced by a document (l) The intention expressed by the first part of the rule seems clearly to be that where a document is material it shall not be necessary to set it out at length but only to state the legal effect of it the object apparently being to prevent long pleadings (m) Thus it is sufficient if a plaintiff in a suit for the recovery of immovable property under a will states in his plaint the effect of the will under which he claims He is not bound to set out the precise words of the will although a question has arisen as to the true construction of those words (n) At the same time it is not enough for a plaintiff to say that under and by virtue of a certain deed he is entitled to the property claimed by him He must state the effect of the document on which he relies (o)

Precise words —In an action of libel or slander it is always necessary to set out the exact words alleged to be libellous (p)

10 [New R S C, O 19, r 22] Wherever it is material to allege malice, fraudulent intention, knowledge or other condition of the mind of any person, it shall be sufficient to allege the same as a fact without setting out the circumstances from which the same is to be inferred

Malice knowledge &c

Condition of mind —Rules 10 11 and 12 are no more than practical applications of the general principle laid down in r 2 above Malice fraudulent intention knowledge etc constitute in some cases the material facts of a party's case they must therefore be alleged in the party's pleading But the circumstances from which they are to be inferred need not be stated in the pleading

Malice —Malice is a necessary part of the cause of action in suits for slander of title and for malicious prosecution It must therefore be alleged by the plaintiff in his plaint Similarly where a defendant in an action of libel claims privilege alleging that the words complained of were used on a privileged occasion the plaintiff may allege and prove malice that is improper motive

Knowledge —In a suit by a servant against his master for injury caused by the dangerous condition of a building where he is employed the plaint must not only affirm the master's knowledge of the danger but must also negative the servant's knowledge of it (q) To support an action for damages for the bite of a dog the plaintiff must allege and prove that the dog had to the defendant's knowledge bitten or attempted to bite some person before it bit the plaintiff (r)

11 [New R S C O 19, r 23] Wherever it is material to allege notice to any person of any fact, matter or thing, it shall be sufficient to allege such notice as a fact, unless the form or the precise terms of such notice, or the circumstances from which such notice is to be inferred, are material

Notice as part of cause of action —Notice where it forms part of the cause of action must be pleaded as a fact e g notice of suit proposed to be brought against the Secretary of State for India [see s 80] or against a Railway Company (s) or against a Municipality notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange notice to a tenant to quit etc It is not necessary to set out the notice verbatim in the plaint

12 [New R S C, O 19, r 24] Whenever any contract or any relation between any persons is to be implied from a series of letters or conversations or otherwise from a number of circumstances, it shall be sufficient to allege such contract or relation as a fact, and to refer generally to such letters, conversations or circumstances without setting them out in detail And if in such case the person so pleading desires to rely in the alternative upon more contracts or relations than one as to be implied from such circumstances, he may state the same in the alternative

Implied contract or relation

Implied contract —A contract may be expressed in one document or it may have to be implied from a series of documents or conversations or from a number of other circumstances Rule 9 applies in the former case the present rule in the latter case Circumstances in the conduct of two parties may establish a binding contract between them although the agreement reduced into writing as a draft has not been formally executed by either (t) As regards contracts to be implied from a series of letters it is to be noted that where a Court has to find a contract in a correspondence and not in one particular note or memorandum formally signed the whole of that which has passed between the parties must be taken into consideration (u)

13 [New R S C, O 19, r 25] Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side, unless the same has first been specifically denied (e g, consideration for a bill of exchange where the plaintiff sues only on the bill, and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim)

Presumption of law

Presumptions of law —A plaintiff need not in his plaint allege the consideration for which a bill of exchange was given to him when he sues only on the bill for it will be presumed in his favour that the bill was made for consideration (v) It will be for the defendant to plead that there was no consideration for the bill But if the plaintiff sues on the consideration as a substantive ground of claim he must allege the consideration specifically

14 [Ss 51, 115] Every pleading shall be signed by the party and his pleader (if any) provided that where a party pleading is, by reason of absence or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading, it may be signed by any person duly authorized by him to sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf

Omission to sign plaint—The signing of plaints is merely a matter of procedure (w) If a plaint is not signed by the plaintiff or by a person duly authorised by him in that behalf and the defect is discovered at any time before judgment the Court may allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint by signing the same If the defect is not discovered until the case comes on for hearing before an appellate Court the appellate Court may order the amendment to be made in that Court The appellate Court ought not to dismiss the suit or interfere with the decree of the lower Court merely because the plaint has not been signed The omission to sign or verify a plaint is not such a defect as could affect the merits of a case or the jurisdiction of the Court (x) see s 99

15 [Ss 51 52 115] (1) Save as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, every pleading shall be verified at the foot by the party or by one of the parties pleading or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case

Verification of pleadings

(2) The person verifying shall specify, by reference to the numbered paragraphs of the pleading, what he verifies of his own knowledge and what he verifies upon information received and believed to be true

(3) The verification shall be signed by the person making it and shall state the date on which and the place at which it was signed

Verification of plaint.—The verification of a plaint is not evidence on which a suit can be decreed even if the defendant does not appear (y)

Omission to verify pleading—A pleading which is not verified in the manner required by this rule may be verified at a later stage of the suit even after the expiry of the limitation period The omission to verify a pleading is a mere irregularity within the meaning of s 99 of the Code (z) See notes to r 14 above

16 [New R S C O 19, r 27] The Court may, at any stage of the proceedings order to be struck out or amended any matter in any pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit

16 Striking out and amending pleadings — It seems to me said Bowen, L J in Knowles v Roberts (a) that the rule that the Court is not to dictate to parties how they should frame their case is one that ought always to be preserved sacred But that rule is of course subject to this modification and limitation that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleading which have been laid down by the law and if a party introduces a pleading which is unnecessary and it tends to prejudice embarrass and delay the trial of the action it then becomes a pleading which is beyond his right It is a recognized principle that a defendant may claim ex debito justitiae to have the plaintiff s case presented in an intelligible form so that he may not be embarrassed in meeting it and the Court ought to be strict even to severity in taking care to prevent pleadings from degenerating into the old oppressive pleadings of the Court of Chancery (b)

Unnecessary —This rule has been reproduced verbatim from O 19 r 27 of the English Rules According to the English practice the mere fact that a pleading contains matters which are unnecessary is no ground for striking out those matters (c) It only affects the costs of the pleading (d) An allegation in a pleading will not be struck out merely because it is unnecessary unless it is scandalous or tends to prejudice embarrass or delay the fair trial of the action Thus where in a suit against a Local Board the plaint alleged that a member of the Board had used his influence with the Board for his own private interest and that in consequence thereof the Board had declined to meet the just demands of the plaintiffs the allegations were ordered to be struck out (e) In such a case the allegations are not only unnecessary but they are scandalous For the same reason unnecessary allegations of dishonest conduct made against the defendant will be struck out under this rule (f) In an action to enforce a compromise of a former action it is unnecessary and embarrassing to set out in the plaint the original disputes between the parties such allegations will therefore be struck out (g) Where a statement of claim contained immaterial facts and set out at great length documents which could not be material except as evidence by way of admission so that the defendant could not know what case he had to meet it was held that the whole statement of claim should be struck out as being unnecessarily prolix and embarrassing (h) In a action for slander it is unnecessary and embarrassing for the defendant to state in his defence that he did not say the words alleged in the plaint but that he said somethingelse and that the something else which he said was true such statements will therefore be struck out (i)

Scandalous —Every Court has an inherent power quite independently of this rule to strike out scandalous matter in any record or proceedings The Court has a duty to discharge towards the public and the suitors in taking care that its record are kept free from irrelevant and scandalous matter (j) Scandal is calculated to do great and permanent injury to all persons whom it affects by making the record of the Court the means of perpetuating libellous and malignant slanders and the Court in aid of the public morals is bound to interfere to suppress such indecencies which may stain the reputation and wound the feelings of the parties and their relatives and friends (k) Thus where an application for bail to the High Court contained defamatory allegations against the trying Magistrate which were all irrelevant the High Court of Bombay refused to allow the application to be filed and ordered it to be returned (l) Similarly where a memorandum of appeal alleged partiality against the Judge whose decree was in question the High Court of Madras ordered the objectionable passages to be expunged (m). It must however be noted that nothing can be scandalous which is relevant (n). Thus matters in aggravation of damages are relevant; they will not therefore be struck out though scandalous (o). Similarly allegations of dishonesty or fraud or conspiracy will not be struck out as scandalous if they are relevant to the facts in issue. They will be struck out only if they are irrelevant (p). An application to strike out scandalous matter may be made by any person whether or not he is a party to the suit or personally affected by the scandalous matter (q).

Tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit.—In considering the question whether a pleading tends to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit, a liberal interpretation should be given to the words "trial of the suit". Hence not only a pleading which tends to prejudice or embarrass a party at the actual trial of a suit but a pleading which tends to prejudice or embarrass a party at any stage of the proceedings in the suit would be within this rule (r).

A pleading is embarrassing if it is so drawn that it is not clear what case the opposite party has to meet at the trial (s). But a pleading is not embarrassing merely because it is prolix (t). Nor is a pleading embarrassing merely because it contains allegations that are inconsistent or stated in the alternative (u). See notes to r. 2 above "Alternative and inconsistent allegations". See also notes above "Unnecessary".

The power of the Court under this rule should be exercised with great care and caution. Where a defendant sets up a contemporaneous oral agreement, the Court should not strike out his pleading on the ground that evidence of such agreement is inadmissible under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and that the pleading is therefore embarrassing. Whether an oral agreement contemporaneous with a written document is admissible in evidence depends to some extent as to how the case is presented at the trial (v).

At any stage of the proceedings.—The application under this rule should be made with reasonable promptitude, and as a rule before the close of the pleadings. If it is not so made, the Court may in its discretion refuse to make the order, though the rule expressly states that an order may be made "at any stage of the proceeding". The reason is that the power to make the order under this rule is discretionary (w). Leave to amend has been refused in second appeal (x).

Appeal.—An order refusing to strike out pleadings as scandalous is not appealable as a judgment under the Letters Patent (y).

Practice.—The Court may under this rule order the whole pleading to be struck out as was done in the undermentioned cases ( ) where the statement of claim consisted partly of unintelligible matters, partly of irrelevant matters and the rest of scandalous matter; or it may order the objectionable matter only to be struck out which appears to be the usual practice (a) Where the defect can be remedied by amendment the 7 Court may give leave to amend (b) Where a pleading is not so specific as it ought to be the Court may direct the party to amend his pleading or give further particulars (c)

17 [New R S C O 28, r 1] The Court may at any stage of the proceedings allow either party to alter or amend his pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties

1 S 152 [amendment of clerical and arithmetical mistakes in judgments decrees and orders]

2 S 153 [amendment of proceedings in a suit by the Court whether moved thereto by the parties or not for the purpose of determining the real question or issue between the parties]

4 O 6 r 16 [amending your opponent s pleading compulsory amendment]

5 O 6 r 17 [amending your own pleading voluntary amendment].

Amending your own pleading —The preceding rule deals with amendments which a party desires to be made in his opponent s pleading as where the pleading contains irrelevant and scandalous matter or where it may tend to prejudice embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit. The present rule deals with amendments which a party desires to make in his own pleading

LEAVE TO AMEND WHEN GIVEN

As a general rule leave to amend will be granted so as to enable the real question in issue between the parties to be raised on the pleadings where the amendment will occasion no injury to the opposite party except such as can be sufficiently compensated for by costs or other terms to be imposed by the order (d) I have had much to do in Chambers said Bramwell L J with applications for leave to amend and I may perhaps be allowed to say that this humble branch of learning is very familiar to me My practice has always been to give leave to amend unless I have been satisfied that the party applying was acting mala fide or that by his blunder he had done some injury to his opponent which could not be compensated for by costs or otherwise (e) It does not matter that the original omission arose from negligence or carelessness However negligent or careless may have been the first omission and however late the proposed amendment the amendment should be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side There is no injustice if the other side can be compensated by costs (f) I have found in my experience said Bowen L.J that there is one panacea which heals every sore in litigation and that is costs (g) It is immaterial whether the error sought to be amended was accidental or not There is no rule limiting amendment to accidental errors The rule says all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy There is no kind of error or mistake which if not fraudulent or intended to overreach the Court ought not to correct if it can be done without injustice to the other party (h) Thus a plaintiff in a suit for debt may be allowed to amend the plaint by setting out an acknowledgment passed to him by the defendant even after the defendant has filed his written statement raising the plea of limitation (i) Even an admission made by mistake may be allowed to be withdrawn and the pleading amended accordingly (j) Misdescription of immovable property in a plaint may be corrected even in appeal (k) The party applying however must not be acting mala fide the application to amend must be bona fide and made in good faith (l) Where in a suit on a breach of contract the plaintiff sues for the difference between the contract price and the price realized on re sale but it transpires at the hearing that the property in the goods had not passed to the defendant the plaintiff may be allowed to amend the plaint and to claim damages for the breach being the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of the breach The Calcutta High Court has held that the plaintiff is not entitled to damages unless the plaint is amended (m) The High Court of Bombay has held that the plaintiff is entitled to damages without amendment of the plaint (n) If a plaintiff who by his plaint has claimed pursuant to sec 19 of the Specific Relief Act 1877 specific performance of a contract and compensation in addition or in substitution subsequently gives notice abandoning his claim for compensation he cannot recover damages for breach of the contract without amending his plaint since relief under sec 29 of that Act can be decreed only where the plaintiff is ready and willing to perform the contract and it is therefore still subsisting (o)

LEAVE TO AMEND WHEN REFUSED

It follows from what has been stated above that leave to amend should be refused—

(1) Where the amendment is not necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties as where it is—

(i) merely technical or

(ii) useless and of no substance

(2) Where the plaintiff's suit would be wholly displaced by the proposed amendment

(3) Where the effect of the amendment would be to take away from the defendant a legal right which has accrued to him by lapse of time

(4) Where the amendment would introduce a totally different new and inconsistent case and the application is made at a late stage of the proceedings

(5) Where the application for amendment is not made in good faith

1 Leave to amend will be refused where the amendment is not necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties —This happens where the amendment is merely (1) technical or (2) of no substance

Where the amendment is merely technical —If after the evidence for the plaintiff has been taken the defendant applies for an amendment merely for the purpose of enabling him to raise a purely technical objection to the plaintiff's right to sue the
